Assembly committee saves water board by a single vote

Nader Agha promises twice as much water for half the cost

■ McPherson blames Laird, who offers counter-proposal

By PAUL MILLER

AN EERIE, empty silence hangs over the hulking remains of the old brickworks in Moss Landing.

Giant paddles in precipitation ponds that look like colossal ice cream makers stir no more. The kilns are cold, the motors are still, the silos are empty and the conveyor belts convey only an idea: America's days as an industrial superpower are behind it.

The magnesium bricks once produced by the millions from the waters of Monterey Bay and used to line furnaces at steel mills in Pennsylvania and Ohio are now made in the Far East. Since 1999, the 200-acre National Refractories plant, just south of the familiar Moss Landing power generating station, has been still.

So sudden, and so complete, was the shutdown, coffee cups can still be seen on abandoned office desks. The place looks as if someone waved a magic wand, causing the employees to disappear but leaving everything else intact. An owl has moved into a storage shed and lives among stacks of finished, cream-colored bricks that were suddenly rendered worthless when the Chinese figured out how to make them cheaper. It's too bad John Steinbeck wasn't around to chronicle the demise of heavy industry in Monterey County.

But a new kind of post-industrial entrepreneur has arrived on the scene, and he sees a big opportunity doing the opposite of what National Refractories did. Instead of extracting valuable minerals from the waters of the Pacific Ocean, he wants to extract valuable water and throw the minerals away.

"This whole community has a water crisis, and we have to do something about it," says Nader Agha, a real estate developer who bought the Moss Landing brickworks out of bankruptcy court last year for $7.5 million. His solution: Tear down a jumble of towers and pipes that once was the final step in getting the magnesium ready to be shaped into bricks, and turn it into a 21,000-acre-foot desal plant — with room to expand it by 50 percent.

"We intend to provide a safe, reliable and drought-resistant source of high-quality drinking water," Agha said.

And he says he can do it at a much lower cost — less than half as much for more than twice as much water — than the figures being floated for a possible Cal-Am desal plant across the street at the power plant. "Our cost will be $78 million for a 30,000 acre-foot capacity," Agha told The Pine Cone.

He's already made a deal with a north county water agency, the Pajaro-Sunny Mesa Community Services District, to lease the land for the plant and start the permit process. "It will take about a year to a year-and-a-half to fin-

SACRAMENTO — A SENATE bill to dissolve the water management district died in an Assembly committee Wednesday after it failed to garner a fifth vote needed to make it to the full Assembly.

Senator Bruce McPherson, author of SB 1529, blamed Assemblyman John Laird, who also has legislation pending regarding the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District, for scuttling it.

"I hope that John Laird is happy with the status quo of a district that is bankrupt, will spend millions more in the future and have no significant impact on solving an identified water crisis on the Monterey Peninsula," McPherson said Wednesday evening after his bill achieved a 4-2 vote in the Assembly Local Government Committee — one short of the five Yes votes needed.

McPherson said a freshman assemblyman who had voiced support for the bill ultimately did not vote due to pressure from Assembly Speaker Fabian Nuñez.

But Laird, who was busy in the Capitol testifying before other committees and shepherding some of his own 28 bills through the Legislature, said he did not even know the fate of SB 1529 until 6 p.m.

He said the two Assembly members who voted against the bill and the three who did not cast votes drew their own conclusions.

"I didn't lobby this bill heavily," he said. "I've always been advocating for a practical solution that supplies affordable housing and a reliable water source."

To that end, Laird has authored two bills that would affect the Peninsula's water supply: AB 2918, which would require the PUC to study the possibility of supplying cheaper energy to desalination plants, and AB 1300, which would allow the state to approve a water project for the Monterey Peninsula only if it would at least make up for Cal-Am's overpumping of the Carmel River and provide 750 acre-feet for affordable housing.

If the district has not authorized a project by 2010, according to Laird's bill, it would lose its right to develop water projects but retain control over permits, habitat restoration and conservation.

"My suspicion is if there's no project by 2010, we would be looking for a completely alternative structure to every-

Getting to the nitty-gritty of job cuts

By MARY BROWNFIELD

WITH THE impending loss of 24 coworkers, Carmel city employees are honing their multiple-hat-wearing skills in preparation for the July 1 effective date of the 2004/2005 budget. While the public gets used to closed restrooms and shortened library hours, the police chief will be learning how to run the fire department, forestry and street workers will be lending each other a hand, and clerks will be relocating their offices and taking on new tasks.

"I've told everybody to take their time. July 1 is a target date, but it may take us longer," to implement the changes born of cutting jobs and restructuring departments as called for in the recently adopted 2004/2005 budget, city administrator Rich Guillen said. "That's fine, so long as we're detail-oriented in how we make the transitions so things don't fall through the cracks."

Since the council's adoption of the budget June 3, Guillen has been meeting with department managers to determine the least painful way to implement it.

In city hall, the front desk will be occupied by administrative coordinator Margi Perotti, moving from the public works and forestry building on Junipero, and Stephanie Pearce, moving from the library. They will replace Cindi Lopez-Frincke and Rhonda Ragghianti, whose last day on the job will be June 30.

Perotti and Pearce will continue handling some of the business of their departments as well as taking assignments from Guillen and his executive assistant, Sandy Farrell.

Pooling the clerks makes sense not only because there are fewer people doing more jobs, but so the work still gets done even when the person who normally handles it is out of the office.

Serial thieves de-pine Sunset Center

By MARY BROWNFIELD

SEVERAL YOUNG Monterey pine trees have disappeared from the recently remodeled Sunset Center, leaving city officials wondering how to stop the thefts.

Someone stole seven of the 11 one-gallon pines planted alongside the steps leading from San Carlos Street to the theater courtyard — almost as many as were taken last December.

"We replaced them and asked the gardener to keep an eye on them," but she has since left the city, said city forester Mike Branson. "Then a couple of weeks ago, someone noticed the trees were gone again."

Branson and city administrator Rich Guillen hope to devise a scheme for catching the thieves, or at least diminishing their thirst for pines.

"Other than having armed guards, it's difficult to control people, whether it's maliciousness or

CAWD will try again to fix sewer plant outfall

By PAUL MILLER

A YEAR after a sizable hole was discovered in the outfall pipe from the Carmel sewage treatment plant — allowing treated wastewater to flow into the surf just off Carmel River State Beach — officials in charge of the pipe are launching another effort to try to fix it.

“We’re trying to get the weather to cooperate,” said Ray von Dohren, general manager of the Carmel Area Wastewater District. “The surf conditions haven’t been acceptable.”

Divers need relatively flat water to work in the shallows where the hole is located, he said.

But complicating the work is the fact that the section of pipe where the hole is located has once again been covered by about two feet of sand — and some of that sand has once again flowed into the pipe.

Last January, so much sand entered the outfall that it became 80 to 90 percent blocked, requiring an emergency fix.

Then, divers working in deep water at the end of the outfall were able to clear the blockage with a special vacuum. But they couldn’t repair the hole because big waves made it too dangerous to work near the beach.

Another complicating factor: Valves at the end of the outfall, which are supposed to prevent sand and other material from entering the pipe are stuck open.

“It’s such a nice place to live, various sea creatures have grown in there, keeping the valves from closing all the way,” von Dohren explained.

Also, not much water flows out of the pipe in the summer, which allows material to accumulate. “Practically everything we’re producing — about 1.7 million gallons of reclaimed waste water a day — goes to irrigate the golf courses in Del Monte Forest.”

That water has to be supplemented with potable water because of its high mineral content. But von Dohren said his agency and the Pebble Beach Co. are close to an agreement to build a new treatment plant that would raise the quality of the reclaimed water.

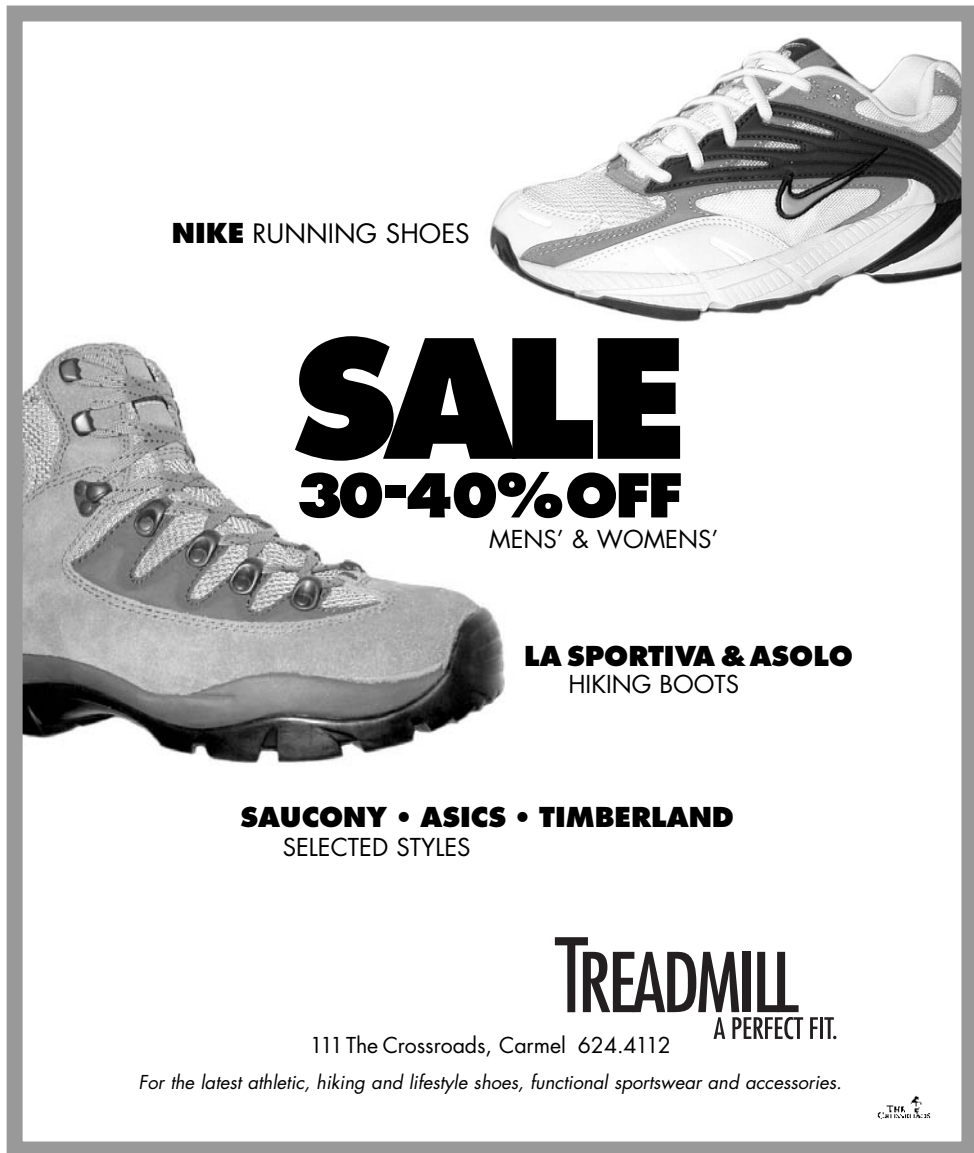

Meanwhile, CAWD has a contract with a new dive company, North Coast Divers from Petaluma, to install new valves on the outfall pipe and fix the hole. “Their mobilization costs are much less because they’re closer than the outfit we used last winter,” von Dohren said. “We should get some pretty good conditions this summer.”

Another night of dancing at Carmel Plaza

THE SHOPPING center downtown on Ocean between Junipero and Mission, Carmel Plaza, is hosting another free dance Thursday, July 1 from 5 to 8 p.m. This month’s featured performer is Con Corazon, which plays a spicy, eclectic blend of Latin, classical and jazz, according to marketing director Cara Wilson. While the dancing will be on the plaza level, many shops and restaurants throughout the three-story center will remain open during the evening.

Future dances, also from 5 to 8 p.m., include Aug. 5 (J.J. Hawg) and Sept. 2 (David Morwood Jazz Duo).

Downed power lines spark grass fire on river bank

By MARY BROWNFIELD

A TREE limb fell through power lines which ignited a grass fire near the Highway 1 bridge over the Carmel River last week. Using the access road for the sewage treatment plant, 33 firefighters from four engines and a volunteer company, as well as a California Department of Forestry hand crew, had the fire under control in 30 minutes and kept it confined to an acre, according to Cypress fire prevention specialist Tony Campa.

"A limb had broken off a tree right by the wastewater plant and started a small fire, about 3 feet by 10 feet," he said. "It also caused a fuse to go out farther down the line, and that's what caused the bigger fire."

When the fuse malfunctioned, its components burned and dropped on the dried vegetation below, according to Campa.

Cooler temperatures and minimal wind helped crews get the June 17 blaze quickly under control. "Had it been a little warmer and the wind had kicked up, it could have blown toward the hotel," he said, referring to the nearby Carmel River Inn.

After extinguishing the flames, firefighters cut a line around the burned area and mopped up, remaining on scene until 8 p.m.

The downed wires also cut power to several nearby residents and businesses.

The Carmel Area Wastewater District plant used its generator to continue operating until PG&E restored service, according to Campa.

Suspect arrested hiding in Carmel hotel

By MARY BROWNFIELD

CARMEL POLICE helped U.S. Marshals locate and arrest a battery suspect holed up in a downtown hotel Wednesday. Jeffrey Stevens, 35, was wanted in Washington State for an alleged assault on his estranged girlfriend, according to Carmel Police Detective Buck Melton, who helped with the lunchtime capture.

Acting on a tip, the marshals, who had been summoned from their San Jose headquarters after the suspect crossed into California, notified CPD they were searching for Stevens here.

Upon the marshals' arrival in town, they noticed his car parked outside the Village Inn.

"We went into the office, and they said, 'Yes, he's registered here,'" Melton said. Stevens had reportedly spent several nights at the inn, paying with cash.

"They felt he was in the room because he had just called down earlier and said he wanted to stay another night, and he needed to come down and pay," Melton continued.

Because the suspect was listed as possibly dangerous, Melton waited in the back room of the office, Tazer at the ready. The three U.S. Marshals sat in the lobby.

"He was contacted in the lobby and taken into custody, with resistance," Melton said. The 5-foot-11-inch, 180-pound man had to be wrestled to the floor and cuffed, but the detective did not have to use his Tazer during the arrest.

Stevens was booked into Monterey County Jail to await extradition to Washington, Melton said.

Military registration, recruitment talk

MONTEREY PENINSULA Quakers, the Peace and Justice Center, the Women's International League of Peace and Freedom and other groups will host a Military Recruitment Information and Organizational meeting June 26 from 10 a.m. to noon in MPC Social Science Room 102. The talk will address the mandatory registration of high school students for military service. Call 625-1623 for info.

Peninsula Homeowners Flock To New Option Loan Program

MONTEREY PENINSULA – Homeowners with mortgages over $200,000 can now opt for a recently announced mortgage offering which allows one of four different payment options each month. One option reduces the monthly payment up to 35%. In addition, there is no income or asset verification required. Self-employed individuals with good credit are OK. The best part for many homeowners is they can take unlimited cash out of their equity for any reason.

Another big advantage is that rates on these loans are well below those of the current interest rates. Many people consolidate high interest credit debt or do home improvements. The public can obtain a free four minute recorded report which provides details of how this loan works by calling 1-800-785-2662 ext. 222, seven days a week, 24 hours a day.

Brakes! I said Brakes!

A 65-year-old Monterey woman rear-ended a bus on Ocean Avenue Friday when she mistakenly hit the gas, according to Carmel Police Detective Buck Melton. The collision occurred as Helen Further was following the Monterey-Salinas Transit bus eastbound on Ocean Avenue approaching Carpenter Street just before 4 p.m. June 18.

"Instead of hitting her brakes, she hit the accelerator and hit the back of the bus," Melton said. The driver complained of pain and was transported by ambulance to Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula for evaluation. None of the 11 passengers on the bus, nor its driver, suffered any injuries.

The front end of Further's Hyundai was severely damaged, and the car was towed. The fire department estimated the loss at $5,000. The bus wasn't damaged, according to Melton, and Further was not cited for rear-ending it.

World War II vet recalls momentous battles of the Pacific

By MARY BROWNFIELD

WHEN CARMEL Valley resident Max Drewien celebrated his 85th birthday last weekend, his family and friends honored him by gathering the artifacts of his short-but-intense military career. Coming on the heels of the 60th anniversary of D-Day and the dedication of the World War II memorial in Washington, D.C., and as American troops fight wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, the memorabilia sparked poignant memories for Drewien, among them the explosion and sinking of the USS Arizona in Pearl Harbor.

From a pioneering family that in the late 1800s loaded its possessions into a covered wagon in Nebraska and journeyed to Mexico, Drewien, born June 11, 1919, spent the first 15 years of his life south of the border.

But when his mother left Mexico to join his sister in Carmel, Drewien felt compelled to follow. So he hitched a ride with a man delivering a car to San Francisco.

"He dropped me off in front of the old smoke shop on Ocean Avenue. It was Nov. 27, 1935," Drewien remembered.

Four years later, he joined the United States Navy. Five of the 50 enlisted men gathered in the San Francisco Federal Building backed out at the last minute, while those remaining raised their hands "as high as we could," and took the oath for a six-year stint. Their next stop was a G.I. barber shop in San Diego.

"One fellow had beautiful red hair. I think he'd had it set before he left home.

Max Drewien, 1939

He told the barber how to cut it, and the barber went right over the middle. He was crying," Drewien said.

Hair was the least of his concerns as he and the other "swab jockeys" endured basic training. When it came to putting in for the ship of his choice, Drewien asked to be assigned to an aircraft carrier or a heavy cruiser.

"Of all things, I was assigned to the USS Tennessee. I looked at the fellow next to me and said, 'What the heck is the Tennessee?' I didn't even know it was a battleship," he said.

He boarded the huge ship in Long Beach. At 624 feet long and close to 100 feet wide, the Tennessee was Drewien's home for five years and three months.

As a Seaman 2nd Class, he mainly swabbed decks and painted his way up to Seaman 1st Class in the antiaircraft division and applied for assignment to the gunnery. He got the job, but there was a bit of unfinished business.

"The man who ran the division had to sign the request, and he looked at my records," Drewien recalled. "I had been there for two years, and he said, 'You haven't done KP duty.'"

That job entailed setting tables, feeding and washing up. "It sounds crazy, but everyone had to do a tour of mess cooking," he said — a never-ending chore he likened to milking cows.

He was on his way down to the scullery when all hell broke loose. "I had just finished washing, and all the water was still in the dishpan, when I heard this big explosion," he said. It was Dec. 7, 1941. The Japanese were bombing Pearl Harbor.

Standing inside a casement containing a large broadside gun, Drewien looked out the hatch to see black smoke billowing from the shipyard.

"I saw this plane coming. It was olive green and flew low, right over the ship. I could see the pilot. I could even see his teeth."

He fleetingly wondered what sort of baffling exercise the Army and Navy were executing, but then he spotted another plane as it dove on the port side. The Japanese pilot dropped a bomb and then swung the plane around so the tail gunner could fire.

"And as I turned to run to my battle station, I hit the bench, and everything went flying — the pots and pans and everything," he remembered.

Indelibly imprinted on Drewien's memory is the sight of the USS Arizona coming under attack.

"I was loading a round, and I happened to look starboard. It was really strange: The ship kind of rose up and then just exploded. The smoke was so thick and so bad, we couldn't see," he said. When the battleship sank, 1,177 men on board died.

"Then we had to shift targets, because there were nine planes coming from the bow toward the stern in three groups," he said. "I could see the bombs coming down."

With nowhere to run, the men kept firing at their attackers. A bomb struck one of the turrets, and its shrapnel killed a Navy captain on the deck of the USS West Virginia, moored next to the Arizona.

"And then the next one hit turret number three. It went through the roof, but fortunately it broke into three pieces. It was a dud," he said. "Those bombs were 16-inch projectiles with fins and were armor penetrating. If that had gone through that deck, I wouldn't be here telling you about it."

The mayhem kept Drewien and his fellow seamen distracted from the devastation around them, but the time came when they were faced with the incredible tragedy.

"As long as you were busy, nothing bothered you," he said. "But after it was over with, when the smoke and things cleared, it was pathetic to see all the men who were dying in the water and floating there.

"They took boats with lines and tied them to corpses, pulling them across the channel. Most were killed by fire or drowned, and the oil was thick and burning," he said.

The USS Maryland had sunk directly in the path of their ship, and despite the captain's orders for full steam head, "we never moved for hours, days," but the propellers pushed the burning oil away.

The men stuck to their battle stations for 48 hours, dreading the possible return of the Japanese forces that had devastated the unsuspecting harbor.

"After it calmed down, we actually thought they would come back again," he said. "If they had come back, they would have taken the island."

Northward bound

Two weeks later, the USS Tennessee finally managed to get underway to Washington for repair. The ship and her crew were then sent to Alaska to search for an enemy submarine base in the Aleutians.

"We were there for two months, and I didn't see the sun for more than about 20 minutes," Drewien said.

As war heated up in the South Pacific, the USS Tennessee was sent to help. Between Nov. 18, 1943, and Aug. 7, 1945, her crew engaged in 13 combat missions, including in Saipan, Guam, Iwo Jima, Okinawa and the East China Sea.

Beginning with the Kiska operation in Alaska and ending in Okinawa, her gunners shot 158,218 rounds of ammunition to destroy 24 planes and damage three more and sink eight Japanese ships. Between Dec. 7, 1941, and Sept. 2, 1945, the ship steamed 170,073 miles.

Firefighters break local MDA fundraising record

AFTER THREE days of standing on street corners with boots in hand, firefighters from Carmel Valley and Cypress fire protection districts raised $10,650 for the Muscular Dystrophy Association, according to Shannon Baker of the MDA.

"We set $10,000 as our lofty goal, and we blew it away," she said. The figure is far higher than last year's, due to the participation of more firefighters. "And the more years they do it, the more momentum they gain. Obviously, it adds up fast. It was a very successful event."

For a half century, the International Association of Fire Fighters has been the MDA's biggest sponsor, raising more than $200 million to help research and treat neuromuscular diseases. Last year, firefighters nationwide raised $18 million for the association.

The MDA provides patients ages 6 to 21 the opportunity to attend a free week at Camp Harmon in the Santa Cruz Mountains offering activities and sports specially designed for people who have limited mobility or use wheelchairs.

young men doing the job we'd been trained for," Drewien said. "I was very happy to serve in the Navy and to serve my country."

By the time he was honorably discharged on Dec. 20, 1945, at the age of 25, Drewien had served six years and 20 days. He then toyed with the idea of joining the border patrol — where his Spanish would have been useful — but decided to pick up where he left off in Carmel. He took a job with the city which paid far less than his military salary. Later, he spent three decades at the Carmel Sanitary District, eventually becoming its manager before retiring in 1974.

Now the father of seven grown children, some with children of their own, Drewien spent his 85th birthday surrounded by his family, friends and fellow veterans.

Among them were retired Air Force Col. Jim Nakashima, who flew for 21 years and served in Vietnam and now oversees the county housing authority, and Alfred Poirier, who had been stationed at the Army base across the channel from the Naval fleet during the Pearl Harbor attack.

CARMEL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE • 624-2522 • June 2004

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE By Tom Williams, CCC President

"What's good for business is good for Carmel"

As we approach the middle of our business year, it has occurred to me how much the board has been able to accomplish this year and how much we still have to accomplish. In November of 2003, the board retreat addressed the projects we thought were of the utmost importance to our membership. Among the items discussed were the need for an updated website, to draw more users, development of a new visitor center, kiosk and/or office site, redesign of the chamber office for functionality and esthetics, and additional destination marketing.

Our new exciting website will have an early August launch. It will include advertising from our membership as well as branded chamber items for sale. It will also include expanded member services to include a "hit" counter for each and every business, enhanced graphics, scrolling advertising, and a current calendar of events. We continue to explore opportunities for a kiosk/visitor center. One of the possibilities is a cart, which will enable us to move the kiosk from area to area as needed. On days when large numbers of buses arrive, we would be near the parking area, on July 4th in the park, and on busy weekends we could locate where needed and be able to move around town to enhance our visibility. New office furniture has been ordered which will enable our staff to work more efficiently. Our marketing committee continues to expand our destination marketing to include Carmel-by-the-Sea and the larger sphere of influence.

The board of directors with the unstinting help of our staff has created a retirement plan for the staff, hired a new CPA to prepare our taxes each year, explored new funding sources, attended council meetings and Carmel-by-the-Sea marketing committee meetings, put on 3 new member orientations, coordinated shuttle services for the AT&T event in February, provided candidate forums during the past election cycle and continued to service over 40,000 people each year in person or on the telephone.

I believe these are amazing accomplishments for the staff and our membership. None of this would be possible without your support. The membership continues to grow and understand the necessity of our programs to enhance visibility in the area. So many of you are willing to donate time, money and products for the many events we stage from the new member orientation to the Taste of Carmel. The board of directors and I thank you for all you contribute. We are also planning a mid-year retreat to assess our progress. Feedback from you, the membership, is most welcome.

We are always interested in your input and observations. Please email me, tom@hale-williams.com or telephone the chamber office, 624-2522, with your comments. Thanks for your input.

ish the EIR and get the permits," maintained Agha, who is known for his hard-charging business style, and also for his optimism.

But he's not the only who's believes the plant will be built. "I'm very confident," said Marc del Piero, lawyer for the P-SMCS and a former member of the State Water Resources Control Board. "Our board of directors has decided to take 'all such actions' as are needed to get it done."

Del Piero also said his agency was working aggressively to lessen any environmental impacts from operating a large desal plant on the shores of the Monterey Bay National Marine Sanctuary.

"We've already asked for the help of the Moss Landing Marine Labs to mitigate the impacts from the intake and the outfall," he said.

Those pipes already exist, and it was fortuitous for Agha that they do. He said he bought the land as a real estate investment, only to discover after completing the purchase that the site was ideal for desal.

"I feel very grateful that we were fortunate enough to acquire this property," said Agha, who arrived from Syria in 1965 with just $17 in his pocket and has amassed a large fortune from his real estate dealings. "After the acquisition we discovered a bigger gift in the site, which I consider the best gift from the Lord, and I intend to share it with the community that has been very generous, kind and helpful to me over the years."

Nearby, two large pipes hugged the ground alongside Highway 1, capable of carrying millions of gallons of seawater a day to Agha's property, just as they did in the brickwork days. Underground, another pipe headed to an outfall 300 feet offshore, completing the circuit.

"The coastal commission has already made it clear that they won't allow any more outfalls," said Reuben Helick, who is handling commercial leases on the property.

"Our location has been found to be the most suitable site for desalination and it comes with all the perfect ingredients — including the existing intake and outfall, 27-million-gallon-capacity storage tanks, and a large amount of land which is necessary for future expansion," Agha said.

According to del Piero, the plant will have a capacity of about 21,000 acre-feet per year. Of that, approximately 4,000 AF would be used to eliminate the overdraft of water supplies in the Pajaro-Sunny Mesa area and for new uses in North Monterey County, including Moss Landing. The rest, almost 17,000 AF per year, could be shipped to the Monterey Peninsula to stop the illegal pumping from the Carmel River, and for existing lots of record and growth anticipated by the county and the cities.

"We would build a pipeline to deliver the water to Seaside," del Piero said. Either the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District, Cal-Am or the various cities could sign a contract to buy the water, which will cost between $1,100 and $1,400 per acre-foot to produce, depending on the price of electricity. It helps to have a power plant next door.

One of the former brick factory's most valuable assets is its collection of large pipes (above) which could be used to deliver water from Monterey Bay to the proposed desal plant. Another set of existing pipes would take the resulting brine out to sea.

"We've already met with the leaders of Duke Energy, which owns the power plant, about negotiating a lower cost for electricity, and we received a very satisfactory proposal from them," Agha said.

And he claimed to have another competitive advantage over Cal-Am's proposal. "They will be allowed by the Public Utilities Commission to add a profit margin of 9.9 percent to their capital investment, so they have an interest in driving up the cost of building a desal plant," Agha maintained. "But our plant will be built with no profit for anyone."

Despite his optimism, after decades of nothing being accomplished to increase the Monterey Peninsula's water supply, Agha acknowledged that minefields are dead ahead.

"It's easy to get the salt out of the water, but it's not so easy to get the politics, the greed and the egomania out of the process," he said.

"Right now, there's no backup," he said.

Guillen sees cross-training as sharing resources — a common practice in the private sector that goes largely unused in government.

"None of us should not have someone else in place who knows what our responsibilities are," he said. When Guillen is away, Carmel Police Chief George Rawson serves as his go-to guy.

Carmel Department of Public Safety

While police officers and firefighters will continue handling their separate responsibilities, Rawson will assume the new role of public safety director and oversee both departments.

Administrative coordinator Leslie Fenton, who works in the fire station, will move up to the police department on Junipero as part of that consolidation.

Having spent his career in law enforcement, Rawson is meeting frequently with fire department staff and studying hard in preparation for his expanding job duties.

Carmel Valley Fire Chief Sidney Reade, who stepped in as acting chief after Bill Hill retired three years ago, has also spent "countless hours" counseling him on the ins and outs of the fire service, he said.

To learn the technical aspects of the job and understand the critical functions, Rawson plans to job shadow as well as observe the practices of other area fire departments.

"As I gain knowledge, I will have opportunities to make decisions on how things run," he said. "I can take my skills in the police department in terms of administering people and programs and transfer them to the fire side."

Rawson's management style includes promoting employees who display leadership skills and are community-minded, and then giving them greater responsibility so they are further invested in the well being of their department.

"I'm a believer in empowerment," he said, adding that people benefit from having "ownership in a decision."

With Fenton moving to the police station, all fire and police calls will be taken there, according to Rawson. He's still trying to figure out how to handle the fire prevention aspects of CFD — namely plan checks and site inspections — that were part of Carmel's contract with Carmel Valley Fire.

"The goal is a seamless transition, but the reality is there will be some bumps, which we will try to smooth out as quickly as we can," Rawson said.

He sees great potential for each department's staff to work together, sharing resources and experience, and he plans to spend a lot of time in the firehouse on Sixth Avenue. Rawson also said each side will benefit from better understanding the inner workings of the other.

As for whether the two-departments-under-one-chief method will work, Rawson said, "In the long term, who knows? We're looking at this as a one-year program, and at the end of the year, we will reassess."

"My commitment to Rich [Guillen], the council and the community is to bring these two together and manage as best we can."

Arts, recreation, forest and streets

With the the public works and forest, parks and beach departments also slated to come together under one director — a position which remains unfunded and unfilled in 2004/2005 — city forester Mike Branson and streets supervisor Stu Ross will work out the details of sharing workers when necessary, though they will all maintain their own areas of expertise.

That practice is hardly new for Branson and his forestry department. With many jobs requiring three people when he only has two, Branson is already accustomed to calling on employees in the public works department to help.

Community services manager Christie Miller, who is losing her only assistant, Del Neel, said she hopes everyone will be patient when it comes to city events and using the Forest Theater, Vista Lobos and other public property managed by the community activities and recreation division.

She will also be the sole staffer for the community and cultural commission, the Carmel Art Board and the community activities and recreation commission.

"Everything I do is really in the public view, and part of it is making sure I'm still as available to everyone as I have been," she said, despite the increased workload.

A few events formerly hosted by Miller's department — the Kite Festival, Breakfast with the Bunny, Sunday concerts at the Forest Theater and the Movie in the Park — were cut from the budget this year, but Miller hopes local service groups will step in and revive them.

The Carmel Host Lions Club, which already does much of the work for the Kite Festival and the Easter-time bunny breakfast, might take them over completely, Miller said, adding that she would welcome calls from anyone interested in hosting the other events.

"We all just have to find a way to make it work," she said of herself and other city department managers. "It may not be the way it worked a year ago, but that doesn't mean it won't work. It will just be different."

NASA astronaut to lecture Gentrain July 7

By MARGOT PETIT NICHOLS

A VETERAN of four space flights with a total of 227 days in space, Daniel W. Bursch, Captain USN, will share his adventures in a lecture to the Gentrain Society from 1:30 to 2:30 p.m. on Wednesday, July 7, on the campus of Monterey Peninsula College in Lecture Forum 102.

Captain Bursch attended the Naval Postgraduate School in Monterey from 1989 until his selection to the astronaut program in 1991. He currently shares the U.S. space flight endurance record of 196 days in space. He also logged almost 12 hours in two separate space walks.

The Gentrain Society is an auxiliary of MPC dedicated to lifelong learning. The programs are generally held the first and third Wednesdays of each month, with visitors welcome. No charge or registration is required.

Coastal cottages, the Oregon Trail, and women's wellness provide an eclectic book review mix

By MARGOT PETIT NICHOLS

"COTTAGES ON THE COAST — Fair Harbors and Secret Shores" is worth buying for the poetry of its title.

Linda Leigh Paul's latest book on her favorite subject takes us from coast to coast — from Seattle, Wash., to Maine — capturing that certain charm that proximity to the sea lends to sturdy cottages that withstand winds and storms and still look dewy fresh in the seashore sunlight. The photographs, by a number of photographers that illustrate the text, are magnificent, transporting the reader to the fairytale beauty of the "fair harbors and secret shores."

The Bookshelf

By MARGOT PETIT NICHOLS

Included is a nine-page spread on a Carmel Beach stone cottage designed in 1936 by architect C. J. Ryland that is as charming today as it was more than six decades ago. The splendid photos are by Michael Mathers.

The 224-page hardcover, soon to be released, is published by Universe Publishing, an imprint of Rizzoli International Publications, Inc., New York City, and retails at $39.95. Be sure to look for it in local bookshops. It follows the author's "Cottages by the Sea: The Handmade Homes of Carmel, America's First Artist Community," which was reviewed here last year.

“ODYSSEY DREAMS — An epic journey on the Oregon Trail” is a novel by Dennis R. Archambault. The grueling struggle for survival along the Oregon Trail is a fictionalized account of true events. Archambault researched his topic well, and the endurance of its protagonists evokes compassion and respect from readers who will surely be caught up in the drama of the stalwart pioneers who made the trip across country to Oregon, where land was free in the mid-1800s. It is estimated that more than 300,000 embarked on the journey, with 10 percent of these migrants dying along the way.

Archambault writes in the present tense, as one does when recording a dream — which seems quite appropriate for “Odyssey Dreams.” The author appeared at a booksigning at the Thunderbird this week. The 186-page softcover, published by Dance-N-Life Publishers of Calabasas, Calif., sells for $14.95.

GINA RENEE, a resident of Pebble Beach, has written an easy-to-read, informative book titled “Wellness for Women — A Guide to Natural Health, Beauty and Well Being.”

A licensed acupuncturist and a nationally certified Diplomate in Acupuncture, she holds a master’s degree in acupuncture and oriental medicine and is a nutritionist with offices in Monterey. Renee wrote her book to give women a resource on how to improve their health. She covers such topics as nutrition, supplementation, natural beauty, weight management, women’s health issues and the value of acupuncture. She includes recipes for healthy meals and beauty preparations.

The 205-page softcover is published by DaVinci Publications and retails for $19.95 and is available at all local bookstores. Renee will be holding a booksigning at The Pilgrim’s Way bookshop at 6:30, Thursday, Aug. 12. She will discuss her book and there will be a Q&A session. Mark your calendars.

Call for Volunteers

The Quail, A Motorsports Gathering at Quail Lodge is looking for volunteers who want to be part of a unique event taking place during Classic Car week on the Monterey Peninsula in August. This event was created to complement the week of events and provide an intimate, lifestyle experience for a gathering of car enthusiasts. Volunteers would be assisting with the Aug. 12 setup and the Aug. 13 event. In exchange for eight hours of work either day (or four hours split between the two), volunteers will receive a complimentary $150 admission ticket, a discount for a friend, a great lunch, the event collectible poster and hat, and a host of other perquisites. High school students may volunteer on Thursday only and will earn community service credits. The event benefits the Friends of the Carmel Unified School District and the 11-99 Foundation, which aids families of California Highway Patrol officers killed in the line of duty.

Anyone interested in volunteering should email Heidi Markow, The Quail Volunteer Coordinator for FOCUS at thequailvolunteers@yahoo.com or call 596-9613.

Tickets are on sale at (877) 734-4628, and children under 12 are admitted free.

For more information, visit Quail Lodge's website under the Special Events Section - www.quailodge.com

Kick up your heels at 19th Monterey Bay Blues Festival

THE MONTEREY Bay Blues Festival, founded in 1986 by a group of local businessmen, educators and retired military officers all committed to perpetuating the blues, celebrates its 19th anniversary this weekend at the Monterey Fairgrounds.

Plugged In

By Stephen L. Vagnini

This can't-miss festival kicks off tonight with a main stage concert featuring former "Coaster" Alvon and rock 'n' roll Hall of Fame inductee Solomon Burke. Although many of the festival's illustrious founders are either retired or deceased (including late greats Bill Jackson and Sam Karas) a number of the original founding fathers are still active, working year round every fourth weekend of the year to insure a successful festival. Founding members of the Board of Directors still active include Billy F. De Berry, Gus Lewis, Martine Puentes, and Josh Stewart.

Thanks to this long-lasting commitment, the local festival is considered one of the most successful blues festivals in the country and annually awards in excess of one hundred thousand dollars in scholarships and grants to local students, assisting them in the pursuit of their dreams in the field of music and other visual and performing arts.

In addition to Friday's concert on the main stage in the Jimmy Lyons Arena, the three-day event features a wide variety of blues, soul and rhythm-and-blues artists performing throughout the weekend on three stages.

This year's main stage performers include perennial favorites Clarence Carter, Bobby "Blue" Bland, Little Milton, Etta James plus the return of Motown hitmakers Ashford and Simpson, Chicago blues diva Koko Taylor, the Gospel Hummingbirds, Grammy Award winner Keb Mo, plus the winners of this year's MBBF competition, NiteCry. A host of other artists can be seen and heard on both the Garden and Presidents Stage including young folk sensation Jackie Green (Saturday afternoon at the Presidents Stage); pop disco band the Cheeseballs (Sunday afternoon on the Presidents Stage); and blues guitar legend Sonny Rhodes (Sunday evening at the Garden Stage).

To view the complete schedule and to purchase tickets, check out the festival's website at www.montereyblues.com or call the festival office at (831) 394-2652.

Sly McFly's, voted the best blues club by the readers of the local alternative paper for six years running, presents a weekend of blues featuring two of this year's festival performers, Marvin Banks and the aforementioned NiteCry, on Friday and Saturday nights respectively. The week culminates on Sunday afternoon with the club's 6th Annual After Blues Festival Jam Session. For details call (831) 649-8050.

Fourth of July festivities

Next Sunday, Fourth of July activities in the City of Monterey kick off at 10 a.m. with a gala parade down Alvarado Street, and will be followed by a BBQ picnic and live music on the lawn outside historic Colton Hall, and fireworks over Monterey Bay at 9:15 p.m. The traditional Big Little Backyard 4th of July event, in jeopardy next year due to financial constraints, will go on as planned this year and will feature Rain, A Tribute to the Beatles, Santa Cruz Steel, Bo Williams' Swing Machine, Greg Morrison Band, Red Beans & Rice and Pure Ecstasy. The event is free and open to the general public.

Also this Fourth of July, Little Anthony and the Imperials (Tears on My Pillow, Shimmy, Shimmy Ko-Ko Bop, Hurt so Bad and Goin' Out of My Head) will perform at the thirteenth annual Pops & Rocks Independence Day Concert at the A. R. Wilson Quarry in Aromas. The 70-member Monterey County and Santa Cruz County Symphony Orchestras will provide musical accompaniment for Little Anthony, and the orchestras will also play an innovative, electronically choreographed score to a spectacular aerial fireworks display after sundown. The Joe Sharino Band will provide rock-and-roll dance music after the fireworks until 10:30 p.m. For more information and ticket orders call (831) 768-2007 or (888) ROCK100.

Alvon Johnson (right) and his All-Star Band will headline the opening night concert at the Monterey Bay Blues Festival this weekend. The only reason not to attend the three-day event — with concerts on three separate stages — is if you don't like to have fun!

ignorance," he said. Short of installing hidden cameras or forming resident-led patrols of the center's gardens during the dark hours, Branson surmised the city has few options.

Guillen told The Pine Cone he favors a rapid-response approach.

"It's like graffiti that's painted over immediately," he said. "As soon as a tree is taken, get one back in place."

The disappearance of publicly owned plants is not unusual, in Guillen's experience.

"I've worked for other cities where we would do our plantings, and then people would take them to landscape their yards or something," he said.

The trees don't cost anything to replace, since they are propagated by the forestry department from other trees in town, but the thefts still cost the city.

"It's the investment in time and labor and materials to plant them and get them going," Branson said.

More than losing the trees to some cheapskate's garden or to a pine-hater's destructive hands, Branson lamented missing out on the progress the little trees would have made by now had they been allowed to grow.

"The most valuable part is time," he said. "Every time they're removed, we take a step backward. It's been a year since the theater opened, and we have lost a year's worth of growth."

The Sunset Center landscape plan calls for one-gallon pines, not larger specimens that might be more difficult to steal. Guillen said studies have shown the smaller trees establish themselves more strongly and grow more quickly than five-gallon trees.

"They tend to be more vigorous and will surpass a five-gallon tree in five years," he said. "But they're not getting the chance to do that."

thing," Laird said.

With these bills, he said, "I think we do everything for a water project except decide how much is needed for housing and commercial development." Growth questions should be addressed locally, he said.

Laird is seeking McPherson's support but is unlikely to acquire it for both bills. According to McPherson's chief of staff, James Jack, the senator has asked to be a coauthor of the desalination energy bill but remains opposed to AB 1300.

"It ignores the water needs outside of the affordable housing issue," including supplies for habitat restoration, drought reserves, development as called for in the general plans and replenishing the overdrawn Seaside aquifer, McPherson said earlier this week. "And it lets the district continue on whether or not it has a role in developing a new water source.

"It will still be spending millions of dollars to do nothing."

Monterey Mayor Dan Albert, who attended the Wednesday hearing on SB 1529 to represent the mayors of the six Peninsula cities in the district — all of whom supported the effort to dissolve the district — said Laird's bill interferes too much at the local level.

"The thing that bothers us the most is they [the state] are getting into land use in the jurisdictions," he said. "We have general plans with housing elements in them. Let us take care of whatever water we have. We think we're responsible enough."

Laird's desalination energy bill is set to be considered by the Senate Committee on Energy, Utilities and Communications June 29, and he hopes AB 1300 will make it to the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Water Resources before the deadline arrives.

"If it gets McPherson's support, that would help it get through," he said.

Impassioned debate

The Assembly committee's denial of the bill Wednesday afternoon followed lively testimony from proponents and opponents alike.

McPherson, flanked by two Peninsula mayors, members of the building trade and an affordable housing advocate, told committee chairman and bill coauthor Simon Salinas and the four other committee members in attendance the legislation would rid the Peninsula of an ineffective and expensive bureaucracy.

"This is not a personal vendetta," he said. "This is to get something done that has not been done for 26 years at great expense to the Monterey Peninsula."

He cited the oft-repeated points of his campaign in favor of SB 1529: Two-thirds of the voters in the district called for its dissolution in November 2002; the district has spent $60 million and provided no new water since its creation in 1978, and Peninsula residents and business owners should decide the makeup of the agency that governs their water, not the state.

To help address the doubts of some, McPherson offered to amend his bill Wednesday to not take effect until a successor agency was formed and to give district employees priority in hiring for the new agency.

He said the bill also had strong support from four of the five Monterey County supervisors, the Association of Monterey Bay Area Governments, builders, affordable housing advocates and the hospitality industry.

After Monterey Mayor Dan Albert and Seaside Mayor Jerry Smith testified, former water board director and carpenters union representative Ron Chesshire told the committee, "We're prepared to go ahead as a community and do what it takes to form an agency or structure we can operate in a sensible manner."

Leading the opposition, MPWMD board chairman Alvin Edwards vigorously defended the district and blamed the voters for lack of progress on a water project, as it was they, not the board, who defeated plans for a new Carmel River dam and a desalination plan.

"We're not sitting down. We're helping the cities," he said, referring to the district's seeking a role in the development of a Moss Landing desalination plant and underground water storage in Seaside. "I think we've got support out there to keep the district, and getting rid of us won't solve their problem."

At its meeting Monday night, water board directors voted 4-3 to oppose McPherson's bill.

A Sierra Club representative said the district has led effective efforts in conservation and reclamation.

"The cheapest water is conserved water," Jim Metropulos said, adding that the district imposed strict conservation rules Monday in light of less-than-average rainfall and high water use. "If you don't have that district there, who is going to manage supply?"

Bill opponents included the Association of California Water Agencies, a group of California Local Agency Formation Commissions, the League of Women Voters, the Carmel Valley Association and the Planning and Conservation League.

Although he had to leave in the middle of the hearing, Assemblyman Gene Mullin made a motion to recommend approval of the bill and said he would vote later.

After the testimony ended, committee chair Salinas and Assembly members Jay La Suer, Lynn Daucher and Bonnie Garcia voted in its favor, while Patricia Wiggins did not vote.

Afterward, McPherson said he confirmed the bill had Mullin's support, but later McPherson learned from the assemblyman that he had been pressured not to vote on the bill. Assemblyman Darrell Steinberg did not vote, while Assembly members Mark Leno and Sally Lieber voted No.

Understanding the water shortage

LAST WEEK we used this space to point out that the American public is seriously misinformed on numerous important issues facing the country because the news media — intentionally or through negligence — mislead them.

But there is one local issue where the public is holding dearly to a gross misconception despite accurate reporting about it in this newspaper and practically every other local news outlet.

Two weeks ago, for example, our lead headline was, “Despite adequate supply, water users face fines for wasting.” For the umpty-umpth time, we explained that Cal-Am customers are being threatened with fines if their water use exceeds state maximums, not because there is an actual shortage of H₂O in the Carmel River, but because Cal-Am doesn’t have the legal right to pump most of the water it is taking. Thus, the water “shortage” isn’t universal; it only affects Cal-Am customers whose water comes from Carmel Valley. That’s why they are being scolded to conserve OR ELSE. And if one of the customers owns a vacant lot with no water meter and no underground supply to tap into — well, he is just out of luck as far as building something on his land is concerned.

Meanwhile, at places like Ryan Ranch, Tehama, Monterra, Rancho San Carlos and Pasadera, and on individual properties throughout the Monterey Peninsula that have their own wells, the shortage does not exist, leaving residents free to irrigate and bathe and build to their hearts’ content. And in Del Monte Forest, where Pebble Beach and other golf courses have drastically reduced the use of drinking water in the last 10 years, some of the water they’ve saved has been made available for new development.

Meanwhile, sky-high real estate values are driving a sizeable remodel industry that turns old homes (along with their kitchens and bathrooms) into new mini-mansions.

But many people aren’t getting the message. Numerous Letters to the Editor have asked the question: “If there’s a shortage, why is all that building going on?” And casual conversations make the same point. “Why should I cut back on watering my roses when all those new houses are being built at Fort Ord?” a man at a Carmel restaurant asked the other day.

They might as well be asking why new houses are going up in Seattle or Singapore.

A set of very peculiar circumstances left Cal-Am’s customers in this predicament — circumstances that no one anticipated, but which this community has no choice but to fix.

Readers of this newspaper are assumed to be intelligent and well informed. So quit asking why not everyone has the same problems you have.

Protection of irreplaceable natural resources

Dear Editor,

In response to Joseph Edmonson’s recent letter (June 11), we would like to urge property owners to support Monterey Peninsula Regional Park District’s assessment tax. While Mr. Edmonson is correct to point out the importance of health care and education, the protection of our area’s irreplaceable natural resources should also be a matter of great importance to our community.

The Monterey Peninsula Regional Park District’s mission is not just to acquire land. The park district also works to protect the natural character and community value of those lands in perpetuity with the best management practices. In addition to this, it provides educational and interpretive services which open minds to an appreciation and understanding of our natural world and the contribution it makes to a healthy, vital community.

At this moment, The Big Sur Land Trust, The Nature Conservancy and the Monterey Peninsula Regional Park District are working on a conservation plan for the Palo Corona Ranch so that our children and grandchildren may enjoy the majesty of this incredible property for years to come. Over time, this ranch and its rich wildlands will become known as a key landmark on the Peninsula; a popular recreational area for locals, and a sought-after destination for those who visit our region. Long-term stewardship and quality public access, for this and other protected lands, are of the utmost importance for the success of the agencies’ conservation goals and the ongoing support of our community.

The $19 tax is a very small fee for the permanent protection and long-term care of the lands, waters and wildlife our community relies on for its quality of life. We are more than willing to give up one dinner at a restaurant (which would probably be more than $19) to ensure this legacy of open space for future generations.

Carmel are fortunate to have two outstanding markets in the city limits of Carmel-by-the-Sea.

If you enjoy fresh fruits, vegetables and flowers, prime meats, local seafood and cheeses, these are the stores to shop.

They also have ready-made entrees along with delicious deli sandwiches.

Their world-class selection of beers, wines and spirits is second to none.

Both markets have plenty of free parking plus free delivery services.

These markets are treasures and it would be a tremendous loss to the community if even one of them became another art gallery.

If you live in or near the Carmel area, please support both Nielsen Bros. and Bruno's markets.

Outraged over budget cuts

Dear Editor,

As a long time resident of Carmel-by-the-Sea I am outraged! Before election day all we heard was "Keep our little village just as it is, etc. etc." Then, immediately following the election, BAM!, the city council, in its infinite wisdom, voted unanimously in favor of a budget that will do just the opposite of those campaign promises.

To fire well-trained, efficient employees cannot possibly help Carmel-by-the-Sea. Dig deeper and find other ways to come up with more money.

My main concern is for our old established Harrison Memorial Library. This great library is Carmel; re-read the statistics: 6,000 to 7,000 visitors per month to the main branch, and 2,000 to 3,000 children to Youth Services per month. Isn't it the American way to teach and encourage our children to read? We need every single one of our employees. This important goal can only be sustained by retaining city employees.

My family and I have served this library for over 15 years — I know what I am talking about!

Mrs. Richard Little, Carmel

Le Pen's support and France's ban on religious symbols

Dear Editor,

In response to your editorial of June 18, "How the misinformed public gets that way": I do not keep the tapes of France2 (with subtitles) that I watch six days a week via the Monterey County Office of Education channel, so I can not quote statistics, but it is not accurate to say that Le Pen almost won the election against Chirac.

In the first round of the last presidential election, the socialist vote was split among competing socialist and other left of center factions. Because of that, the extreme right candidate, Le Pen, had more votes than any of the left, leaning factions, and the votes for Le Pen's party were second in votes to Chirac's party. Because the second round of their presidential election is between the two parties with the highest vote counts in the first round, Le Pen opposed Chirac on the second round ballot. Because the left of center factions voted for Chirac against Le Pen, even though they did not like Chirac, Chirac was the undisputed winner in the second round. Since then, there have been two national elections. In both of those, the Socialists didn't split into competing factions and beat Chirac's party easily. Le Pen's party wasn't a serious contender.

The Islamic scarf issue isn't as clear cut as you imply, but I agree it is not what we would do. The French seem to believe that they can cut down on fights and prejudice by eliminating symbols of religious difference. The rationale for their ban on conspicuous religious symbols in their schools is probably similar to the ban some local schools have on wearing red or blue in hope of cutting down on gang violence.

Also, hardly a France2 newscast goes by when someone doesn't talk about solidarity with another person or group. They often take to the streets to protest or otherwise join in ceremonies to show solidarity when someone from a different religious group is attacked by extremists or when they believe that someone else is being treated unfairly. I suspect that they consider conspicuous religious symbols a deterrent to solidarity.

I am frequently amazed by hearing what our media or the current administration says or said the French position was or is after seeing Chirac or some other public figure state the French position in a clip earlier in the week. It isn't surprising that ordinary citizens or even our media do not always have the time to compare what our media tells us with what another nation's press reports. Although The Pine Cone's source was faulty, I agree with the editorial's message that we need to know more about world affairs. I think The Pine Cone's misunderstanding just shows how difficult a task this is."

Greta Nisson, Carmel

'It can happen to you'

Dear Editor,

On June 3 our family member, Matt, was involved in a very serious automobile accident in Carmel. He has returned home bruised, battered, and stitched but doing exceptionally well and it appears at this point as if he will make a full recovery. It is impossible to personally thank everyone who helped us, so we wanted to thank you all publicly. Your parts in this miracle are undeniable and will forever be remembered and appreciated by our family and I am sure the other four families involved as well.

To the police, firefighters and emergency personnel who so expertly extricated Matt from the wreckage, treated his injuries, and flew him to the San Jose Medical Center, thank you. You were lifesavers, literally.

To the staff, nurses and doctors of CHOMP and San Jose Medical Center, your concern, care and expertise were simply amazing. Thank you.

To those in the community, and at Carmel High (parents, students, teachers, administrators, coaches and friends) who have offered their prayers, concerns, help and support, thank you. Your actions have meant more to us than you can ever know.

And a final note to the kids at Carmel High and beyond. We realize that you will take risks and make mistakes — it's who you are and what you do at this point in life. But remember, it can happen to you. We know. It happened to us. In an instant. Yes, have fun, but be smart, be safe, be vigilant.

ANGUS WIDROW, 6 in October, is no stranger to this column, although it was five-and-a-half years ago readers first met him. Now, finally reaching a more mature state of mind, according to Mom Bernice, he is less frenetic, more a mellow yellow Lab – although he still has his moments.

We ran into Angus on the walking path on Scenic Wednesday afternoon, just after his third visit to Carmel Beach that day, his fur still wet from his run in the surf out to the first wave.

Angus is in the enviable position of having a home on Scenic just across from the beach, so it is as nothing for him to look at Mom or Dad Sidney and mouth the word "beach" to them, asking for the escort so necessary for his well being. Mom and Dad always comply, having undergone rigorous training during the last six years.

He is usually attired in his purple harness which renders him recognizable among the yellow Lab group that meets at 8 o'clock each morning at the beach. Included in the pack is Hannah Kreeger, with whom Angus has grown up, and non-Lab Kenzie Segale, Scottish terrier, a particular favorite friend.

Angus was eating wild grasses that grow just above the beach bluffs when we ran into him, but as he spied passersby, he took time out to sniff at their pockets, hoping for an ungrassy treat.

On his jaunts to town with Mom, Angus walks around the periphery of La Playa Hotel. Mom thinks it's because of the heavenly fragrances drifting out from Chef Bunyan Fortune's La Playa kitchens.

At home, he convinces Mom to join him on the floor to play with him and his toys. His favorite is a Christmas rubber reindeer that squeaks if the legs and tummy are squeezed. Mom obliges with a satisfying squeak-fest.

The Concept of Bad Equity

You are retiring soon, and you'd like to eliminate debt from your life. You've been paying down your mortgage with extra payments toward the principal balance for years and plan to finish paying the mortgage off when you actually retire.

Good idea? I'm sure Ben Franklin would have thought so, but financial matters weren't quite as complex in his days. Homes didn't gain in value then as they do now. If you have no loan against your home and its equity is continually growing, that equity really isn't doing a thing for you. You may end up house-rich and cash-poor.

But the idea of eliminating a long-seasoned mortgage that is providing little in the way of annual mortgage interest deduction is indeed attractive. There are four things that can be done.

First, you may consider refinancing, pulling out a substantial sum from your home and investing it very conservatively. That way, you would have money available to you should you need it.

Second, you might take out a home equity line of credit that will allow you to access money when you need it—and only make payments on it when you do indeed borrow. Third, you might consider a reverse mortgage (though perhaps later in your life) that will effectively pay out your equity to you in attractive monthly payments.

Last, you might want to sell your home, and move to a home that better suits your new lifestyle and your financial profile. Your existing home may provide a sense of security. Don't let that security go dead on you! Consult with your real estate and mortgage advisors today. Just call Maureen at 622-2565 and visit her website at www.maureenmason.com.

"Carmel Legends"

If you had frequented the corner of 6th and San Carlos Streets twenty years ago or so you might have been the subject of this week's legend. Louise Asmussen was an unusual lady. Notwithstanding her advancing age, she wore only the most current fashion for the times...black leather "go-go" boots, a very short skirt, often times a fur jacket, and carefully coiffed blond hair. Most notable, however, was her pet pigeon... which traveled along with her on a small basket. We can't recall if it had a name... but we do remember that Jim Bannerman who ran the 76 station on the present site of Cottage Row loved to call out from his office, "Is that squab ready for the oven yet?!", which would always elicit a lively response. Mrs. Asmussen, together with her husband, operated an antique business above the Hog's Breath for many years. They have both passed from this scene, along with the pigeon, and somehow that corner has never seemed the same since!

To save money, land use committees will review fewer projects

By PAUL MILLER

FACED WITH crippling budget deficits that forced 40 percent cutbacks in some county departments — and with county planners facing a heavy new workload as they develop a fourth update of the general plan — the board of supervisors this week approved new rules to reduce the amount of staff time required to support 13 local land use advisory committees.

“They estimate it take one-half or three-quarters of a full-time planner just to respond to our comments and our concerns, and that doesn’t include the person who sends out the agendas and packets for every meeting,” said Janet Brennan, chair of the Carmel Valley Land Use Advisory Committee, which meets twice a month. “The concerns are real about staffing the LUACs.”

Tuesday, supervisors reduced the number of projects that would be subject to review by the land use committees. Their action came after negotiations between LUAC representatives and the county planning commission.

“What we agreed upon is to deal with those projects that have the primary effect on the public,” Brennan said. “And those are projects that are in the viewshed or on a ridgeline or on a slope of over 30 percent.” Also subject to continuing review by LUACs would be any project that wasn’t exempt from the California Environmental Quality Act or which required a variance.

“It’s a good compromise, and it’s far better than the original proposal, which would have given us jurisdiction only over projects that involved a general plan amendment or a subdivision. That would have put us out of business,” Brennan said.

Instead, the lion’s share of work eliminated from her committee’s purview is design review — something which has taken up a lot of its time over the years, and rightly so, according to LUAC member Victoria Rugg.

“Without scrutiny you get square, ugly, pink,” Rugg said. “We don’t want bright pink houses standing out in Carmel Valley — there’s one you can see from the post office, and it’s horrid.”

Instead, she proposed that minimal projects, such as “normal” fences and mailboxes be allowed to skip the LUAC process, “but when it comes to design review, it’s something that can be very important.”

One local developer, who didn’t want to be named because he has to appear before the Carmel Valley LUAC from time to time, thought the reforms didn’t go far enough. “They should just eliminate all the LUACs completely,” he said. “All they do is nitpick everything and continue everybody’s projects to meeting after meeting and waste everybody’s time. We have the planning commission and the board of supervisors — why do we need more?”

“Half the factions want us deleted,” acknowledged Rugg. “But we’re just trying to keep the valley’s rural character.”

The LUAC review process was added to county procedures in the early 1980s in response to complaints that the board of supervisors, even though it is composed of elected representatives from various parts of the county, wasn’t responsive enough to local concerns.

“We’re simply an advisory body, but we perform a very important function — as sort of an early warning system for the decision makers. We’re on the front line,” Brennan said.

Other cost-saving measures adopted by the board included leaving it up to LUACs themselves to notify neighboring property owners of a proposed project, and providing the land use committees with just one set of plans for a project.

The LUACs also agreed to limit continuances “so we are not backed up during a time that we are getting a lot of projects and have very limited resources to process them,” Hennessey said in a report to the supervisors.

Also, vacancies on the committees will no longer be advertised in local newspapers, “but we all agreed we need a broad base of noticing vacancies for diversity on LUACs,” according to Hennessey’s report. Instead, vacancy notices will be “posted in public places” and listed on the county’s website, and “LUACs will be encouraged to do public outreach in community clubs and organizations.”

The changes adopted this week are supposed to last just two years, when it is hoped the county’s revenues will have recovered enough to allow the hiring of more planners. The rules are also subject to review by LUAC representatives and planning officials in eight months.

“If budget conditions improve sooner than two years, some of the interim measures could be relaxed,” according to planning director Scott Hennessey.

In addition to Carmel Valley, the county’s land use advisory committees are: Big Sur, South Coast, Bradley-Parkfield, Cachagua, Carmel Unincorporated/Highlands, Chualar, Del Monte Forest, Greater Monterey Peninsula, North County-Coastal, North County Non-Coastal, Spreckles and Toro.

‘We’re simply an advisory body, but we perform a very important function — as sort of an early warning system for the decision makers. We’re on the front line.’

Unique Monterey Peninsula homes

THE BEST HOUSE: An estate from the 1920s

PINE CONE STAFF REPORT

WHILE CITY officials may still be trying to make up their minds about the best way to preserve Flanders Mansion: — Sell it to someone who loves old homes? Restore it at city expense as a residence for visiting artists? They don't have to look very far for a magnificent example of how a private owner can bring an eighty-year-old home into the 21st century with all of its charm intact.

Just up Hatton Road from the old Flanders place is Casa di Campagna, a striking specimen of vintage Carmel homebuilding. Designed by R.J. Ryland, who was also the original architect for Sunset Center, Casa di Campagna occupies a half-acre lot in the hills above Mission Trail Park.

While the home was undoubtedly luxurious in its original incarnation, it had been given a faux Tudor exterior in an early renovation and had fallen into disrepair by the time it was purchased by a Boston businessman, Phil Byrne, two years ago. Marshaling the finest local craftsmen and retaining a Monterey architect, Terry Latasa, Regency Construction as general contractor, and a former dancer and choreographer from Sausalito, Erin O'Connor, as interior designer, Byrne set about turning Casa di Campagna into the ultimate Carmel estate.

The team worked with an ambitious set of "critical objectives," according to O'Connor: "To restore the original style of the building, to enhance its livability by opening up interior spaces that had been inappropriately closed off or partitioned, to emphasize the use of local materials and artisans and to retain and respect Carmel traditions, especially on the exterior."

"The place was a real rabbit warren, with dark hallways and small rooms and everything was really run down," Latasa said. "We knew we'd have to gut the whole structure and build a completely new interior."

Thus began an effort that became more and more collaborative as it went on.

"Being new to town, I had to hire a lot of vendors and subcontractors I didn't know," said O'Connor. "But as we began to work together, everybody started contributing ideas and it became very much a joint effort."

The result: The house came out better than even she thought it would, and O'Connor has an idea why.

"This town is blessed with some really talented people," she said.

Among her favorites were Pacific Grove Millworks, Ingram Plastering, Paddock's Ironwood Welding, Smith's Stained Glass and Baker Floriani Landscape Design.

Features in the 4,615-square-foot main house and 458-square-foot guesthouse include soaring aged-beam ceilings, a gourmet kitchen with mahogany cabinets, four wood-burning fireplaces, hand-forged wrought-iron railings and hardware, 13 sets of French doors leading onto numerous balustrades, balconies, terraces and patios, and 18 leaded-glass windows recovered from an old Rockefeller estate in Maine.

"This project spared no expense and has been widely acclaimed for the care, skill and detail with which it was done," O'Connor said.

The house also has a savvy feature peculiar to local politics: Some of the home's water credits have been retained for future use.

Casa di Campagna, which has 5 bedrooms and 5.5 baths, is listed at $5.495 million with Miles Martin of The Mitchell Group's office in the El Paseo building in downtown Carmel. He can be reached at 915-0096 or on the internet at www.mileswmartin.com

The 3bd/3ba home sits high enough above the street that the foot and car traffic on Scenic does not intrude into the home's privacy. There are unobstructed views of the whole Carmel Beach, Pebble Beach and Point Lobos... and it is a simple walk to the village.

HOUSE OF THE WEEK

"The Boulders" Pacific Grove

A mythic stone lioness serves as sentry at the corner of 6th and Lighthouse overseeing those who enter through the arched, stone entrance. This extraordinary property provides 180 degree views overlooking Monterey Bay. The massive granite wall on the property dates from the 1880's while the current home was built in 1928.
