Tax hike petitions now in registrar's hands

By MARY BROWNFIELD

PROponents of a 20 percent hotel tax hike submitted a stack of signed petitions to Carmel City Hall Tuesday morning, taking another step toward getting the issue before voters.

Mike Biele, along with residents Ann Fairbank and Jim Brun, drafted the ballot initiative to increase transient occupancy tax from 10 percent to 12 percent to help pay for tourism promotion and beach, park and city building maintenance. He sat with city clerk Karen Crouch and executive assistant Sandy Farrell as they counted the signatures. At least 442 are needed.

"There were 651," Crouch reported. Right off the bat, six appeared to belong to people living outside the city limits, and two or three had printed their names but not signed.

Biele initialed each petition, and after tallying the signatures, Crouch asked him to place his initials next to the total number.

"He was very much part of the process," said Crouch, who had Biele and Farrell participate to ensure no accusations of impropriety could be made by anyone.

"In clerk school I heard all these horror stories, and I'm very cautious anyway," she said.

County moves to take over desal project

By PAUL MILLER

WHAT BEGAN as an unambitious desal project to eliminate overpumping from the Carmel River may take a big step toward becoming a large-scale, regional water supply at the Monterey County Board of Supervisors meeting Tuesday, when a county agency asks supervisors to put it in charge of the burgeoning water plan.

"Somebody needs to get their arms around the whole thing and figure out how to manage it," said Curtis Weeks, general manager of the Monterey County Water Resources Agency. "We'll be seeking board direction to move forward with proposals from qualified firms to develop a regional desalination project for our coastal communities."

Because the desal plant is no longer anticipated to supply water just to the Monterey Peninsula, but also to North County, Fort Ord, Marina and even Salinas, it should be managed by the county, Weeks said.

"This project is going to go through three supervisorial districts, and it's going to be expensive, and it needs to happen as soon as possible, and that's why the county should own it and run it," Weeks said. He has been consulting close-

Velvet Paws II — Velvet for short — died while hiding in the crawl space of a neighbor's home when it was fumigated for termites.

Velvet's Law would require advance notice of fumigation

By MARY BROWNFIELD

WHEN VELVET, a 9-year-old "tuxedo" cat with a habit of sleeping in crawl spaces, died underneath a neighbor's Carmel Valley home tented for termites last month, Nancy Carlen thought the devastating episode was unique.

She learned otherwise after hearing about the death of Phoebe, a 7-year-old Dolores Street cat caught under the deck of a neighbor's home tented and pumped full of poisonous Vikane gas Oct. 7.

Motivated by her own loss and other's tales of woe, Carlen is writing Velvet's Law, which would require fumigators to provide 48 hours' written notice to neighbors when a house will be tented and gassed.

"The fact is that this happens all the time," she said, adding that her brother-in-

Committee says high-tech has no place on historic Sunset Center

By MARY BROWNFIELD

DISAGREEING WITH an historian's opinion that small cell phone antennas wouldn't be a modern blight on the lovingly restored exterior of Sunset Center, the Carmel Historic Preservation Committee voted 3-1 Mon-day to oppose the installation of two antennas on the center's roof.

"This building has been so reverently reconstructed," committee member Paul Cross commented after asking if Sprint PCS had considered other sites in town. "It seems so much out of its time to be carrying this antenna, even though it's well groomed and inconspicuously placed."

Representing the wireless carrier, Tricia Knight said installing the antennas at Sunset Center would help fill a service gap.

"Sprint is trying to strengthen signals already here and add more capacity," she said, which is especially important during the busy tourist season when many visitors are attempting to make calls in a small area. Locals are also very familiar with the spotty cell phone service throughout town.

Knight said the installation would be inconspicuous. One antenna, facing south, would be tucked under the eaves at the roof's highest point. The other, on the west side, would be painted to match the shingles and be barely visible from the street.

Equipment would be mounted on the wall inside the third-floor stairwell, and all cables would be routed through the attic.

Knight said Sprint has successfully installed equipment on historic buildings elsewhere in the state.

"We have designed something to blend in," she said.

In her staff report, city planner Elizabeth Caraker said the antennas would be located on parts of the building added during reconstruction and concluded they "will not change the original building or create a false sense of history."

Architectural historian Leslie Dill, hired to review the proposal, concluded it would not change the building's use or threaten its

NEW KNEES NOW CREATED QUICKER WITH 3-D IMAGING

■ Four days in the hospital instead of two weeks

By CHRIS COUNTS

THERE'S good news for anyone who suffers from debilitating arthritic pain in the knees: Thanks to advances in computer imaging, knee replacement surgery just became easier.

Last month, Monterey orthopedic surgeon Scott Kantor performed a total knee replacement surgery using an advancement in orthopedics known as the Ci System, produced by DePuy, Inc., a subsidiary of Johnson & Johnson. The Ci System's computer provides unobstructed three-dimensional images of a patient's anatomy during surgery that would not otherwise be visible through a small incision, making critical alignments of the implant much easier.

"The new system allows me to be much more precise with my surgical technique," said Kantor, who has lived on the Monterey Peninsula since 1995. "It allows me to verify everything I'm doing on a step-by-step basis so I can make the best possible decisions during surgery."

Knee replacement surgery requires pinpoint alignment and one of the chief benefits of the Ci System is its precision.

"This system takes into account the entire alignment of the leg," Kantor said. "The naked eye can't tell the difference between two and four degrees. With this new technology, I can get it down to one-half of a degree."

Cost reduced, recovery quicker

The new procedure reduces the overall cost of total knee replacement — not by making the surgery cheaper, but by making recovery much quicker, Kantor explained. Anything that reduces expensive hospital stays cuts overall medical costs, he said, and smaller incisions directly translate into easier recoveries.

"Patients are out of the hospital in three to four days," Kantor said. "In 1986, when I started my residency, hospital stays took 10 to 14 days. Now, patients are resuming their normal activities in six to eight weeks."

Initially, Kantor found the new procedure sacrificed a certain amount of control.

"As a surgeon, when I made decisions, I learned to trust my instincts and experience," he said. "Now I have to trust a computer. It's a new way of looking at things."

And computers will play an even greater role in the future, Kantor believes.

"There is a movement in orthopedics toward computer-assisted surgery," he explained. "Surgeons want to be as accurate as possible." But because people — and their bone structures — come in all shapes and sizes, that hasn't been easy.

"We can now match our knee replacements to a particular individual versus the standard, average human being," Kantor said.

He also added that knee replacement materials — metals and plastics — are improving, adding to the longevity of a knee replacement. He said 90 percent will last 15 years.

Scott Kantor, M.D.

Painful knees in elderly and young

Painful knees are a common problem for adults, especially the elderly. There are treatments, such as physical therapy and anti-inflammatory medication, for early-stage arthritis that can help alleviate pain and allow people to return to their normal activities. But as the cartilage on the ends of the bones is worn away — a condition called osteoarthritis — normal mechanics of the knee joint are altered, causing intense pain and interfering with the quality of life to the point that total knee replacement surgery is warranted.

"The cartilage that covers the end of the bone is like a cushion," Kantor explained. "It's lubricated. Cartilage is smooth and bone is rough. When the cartilage wears away, the joint loses its ability to lubricate."

Approximately 250,000 knee replacement surgeries are performed each year. And while aging is no doubt a factor in the loss of cartilage, so is the trauma that comes from rigorous physical activity.

"Our population is very active," he said. "We are seeing more young people with arthritis."

There are only 15 Ci Systems now operating around the country, but Kantor believes people are receptive to the new technology.

"Patients are very excited," he said. "They want the latest technology available and even the elderly have embraced computers."

Small parking fixes: Move workers' cars and charge shoppers

By MARY BROWNFIELD

A NEW parking garage or a remote lot with shuttle service might be long-term solutions to downtown Carmel's parking woes, but city council members Mike Cunningham and Paula Hazdovac pitched short-term experiments to a small group of business people last week who seemed open to limiting employee parking and extending time limits for shoppers.

The 1,090 parking spaces in the commercial core and nearby streets are each worth at least $275,000 and as much as $675,000 to businesses each year, Cunningham estimated based on sales tax revenue.

"We wanted employees and business owners to have a sense of how much is at stake," he said after the Oct. 12 presentation hosted by the Carmel Chamber of Commerce at La Playa Hotel. "If we could make a 100-space difference, that would make a significant difference to the merchants and citizens of Carmel through increased economic activity."

Business owners report their workers occupy up to half of the parking spaces downtown, according to Cunningham, who pointed out they also lose when their employees leave several times a day to do the "90-minute shuffle" to avoid getting parking tickets.

Cunningham said it's reasonable to conclude that all those employee-occupied spaces "mean fewer customers come."

He proposed businesses require workers to park outside the commercial district, in all-day spaces such as those along Junipero between Fourth and Eighth avenues. He also suggested employees acquire parking passes from the city so it could keep tabs on how many park and where.

"This only works via cooperative efforts of a critical mass of businesses," Cunningham said, because they would take on the responsibility of implementing it.

Hazdovac told The Pine Cone she favors a more casual, less bureaucratic effort to entice employees to park outside the core business district by removing the 90-minute limit from more spots on its perimeter.

Spenders stay longer

The council members also proposed selling daily passes allowing shoppers to park three hours in 90-minute spaces. Rather than selling the passes at kiosks, business owners would purchase ticket books from the city, perhaps for $2 each, and then sell them for $3 and pocket the profits. Stores could give the passes to their VIP customers, Cunningham suggested, and participating businesses would display signs showing they are vendors, which could generate extra foot traffic.

"We want to keep it simple," he said, adding that the double time passes would jibe with the already available residential parking permits.

Hazdovac also touted the idea's simplicity and said it would generate a little income for the city that might help bring a free Monterey-Salinas Transit trolley through town similar to Monterey's WAVE.

"It sounds like the businesses would participate," she said, echoing Cunningham's observation that many at the meeting liked the experimental programs. "I think if you did these two, it would help greatly. We have very limited parking inventory, so we have to be creative with it."

The council members said they would like to get the experiments going as soon as possible, after clearing any legal issues and giving the public and other city officials the opportunity to comment.

"Some might say all these little tweaks are just too little — that we really need a garage or a remote lot with shuttle — and I wouldn't argue . . . but those are expensive and take a lot of time," Cunningham said. "I think one of the things the climbing lane [added to northbound Highway 1 from Carmel Valley Road] demonstrated is that sometimes a small change can make a big difference."

Hazdovac said the other alternative, doing nothing, is no alternative at all.

"There's no 100 percent fix, but if we can improve it by 20 percent, I would be really happy" she said. "We just have to start doing something instead of ignoring [the parking problem], because it's getting worse every year."

Parking spaces in the commercial core are each worth at least $275,000 and as much as $675,000 to businesses each year.

Sunset Center staff contacted to follow-up with drain cleaning service to clear the stoppage.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Engine 7111 and Ambulance 7166 responded to a medical emergency on Monte Verde. Crews assisted ambulance with vitals, EKG, patient report information and loading for a middle-aged female who was suffering a migraine headache and vomiting.

Padre water polo thrills with close wins in turnaround season

By MARY BROWNFIELD

AFTER A string of lackluster seasons, the Carmel High School boys' varsity water polo team finished the year 12-6, marking a turnaround that included a nine-game winning streak. The Padre team will battle other top-level high school teams from throughout the state at tournaments this month, before heading into the league championships in November.

The final game of the regular season ended in a tough 3-10 loss to Hollister Oct. 12, but coach Aaron Gaily pointed to a silver lining in that cloud.

"It was a good wake-up call for us, because we had won nine in a row," said Gaily, who played water polo when he attended CHS before graduating in 1995.

Recent victories over Robert Louis Stevenson and Gilroy came down to a final goal in the closing seconds of each game.

"These kids never quit. They fight through adversity every day, and they never quit," Gaily said. "We've won a lot of games coming from behind and being underdogs, and the heart they have is really impressive."

Wayfarer celebrates creativity

ROBERT LUSTIG, architect, painter and former Carmelite, will complete a watercolor as Dr. Norm Mowery, pastor of the Church of the Wayfarer, preaches Sunday at 10 a.m. on "Celebrating Creativity."

During the sermon, the pastor will interview the artist, asking his sources of inspiration and ideas.

Following the service will be an art show and sale, featuring works by Carmel painter Ferdinand Burghdorff and others.

This event is the latest in a series celebrating Church of the Wayfarer's Centennial.

He attributed the team's turnaround to hard off-season training and the right attitude.

"We don't really have any stars, but we have just a great nucleus of friends and kids who have committed themselves to each other," he said. "It's been fun to see."

Useless pool

The four seniors, eight juniors and one sophomore who play for Gaily and his three assistant coaches — Peter Dew, Craig Gonzales (who played for Gaily in 1999) and Graham Evans — also deal with the challenge of practicing in other schools' pools, because their 60-year-old "cement pond" is too old and too shallow.

In addition to using their mental skills, muscle and endurance in the pool, the players use their fundraising prowess to scrape together $3,000 to $4,000 a year to rent Monterey Peninsula College's pool for practice. Santa Catalina also allows the Padre team to hone its skills and compete in the girls' pool when they're not using it. The game there against RLS drew 200 spectators, according to Gaily.

"We haven't played a home game in four years, so [the CHS pool] really serves no purpose," he said. "You can't teach water polo there; it's unsafe, and no one wants to play there."

Gaily formed a nonprofit to raise money to replace the pool, which the district estimated will cost $2 million. With the district offering to put up half, the students are trying to fund the other half. So far, they've raised $100,000 from car washes, bake sales and donations from parents, and Gaily hopes others in the community will help the Carmel High School water polo program become the powerhouse it could be if it had a first-rate pool.

Gaily, who with his wife opened his full-time chiropractic practice in Monterey a year ago, also hopes he's making as good an impression on his players as they are on him.

"We're really getting busy, so it's been interesting also running a high school sports program. I'm pretty much going from 5 a.m. to 9:30 at night," said Gaily. "But I just love it. Coaching is one of those things that gives me energy rather than drains me of it."

Giving back to the program he valued so much as a student could inspire some of his players to do the same, he said.

With its regular season wrapped up, the team will head to Sacred Heart Prep in Palo Alto for a tournament this weekend, followed by another tournament at Monte Vista High School in San Jose next weekend. The Mission Trail Athletic League Championships will be held Nov. 3 and 5.

Gaily has high expectations for his team.

"They work hard every day, and we're a completely different team than we were even just a month ago," he said. "They are devoted to hard work and committing themselves to each other, and it's been fun."

LIBRARY GARDEN GETS FIRST OK

By MARY BROWNFIELD

AESTHETICS WON out over the recommendations of an historian and a city planner Monday, when the historic preservation committee voted to recommend approval of the Carmel-by-the-Sea Garden Club's plans to rehabilitate the garden in front of Harrison Memorial Library.

"It's dazzling to see how you've taken that area that was long abandoned and mis-used and make it live again," committee member Paul Coss told Lee von Hasseln after she outlined the plans.

Is a Reverse Mortgage Right for You?

Financial Freedom now offers a reverse mortgage where all origination fees are waived. This saves you thousands of dollars all of which go to increase the benefit amount. The only requirement is that all loan proceeds must be withdrawn. Your financial advisor should be consulted to determine the best use of this money.

Homeowners who are 62 or older may qualify and be eligible even if there is an existing first or second mortgage. The size of the reverse mortgage depends upon the borrowers age(s), the program selected, the home's value, and prevailing interest rates. There are no income qualifications.

A reverse mortgage turns a portion of your equity into tax-free money you can use right now. You make no monthly payments on a reverse mortgage and the loan is not due to be paid until you sell, move or die.

Designed by landscape architect Walter Guthrie — who also developed the garden club's Piccadilly Park rehabilitation — the garden would feature a handicapped-accessible pathway leading from Lincoln Street to the door in the library's arch and another path from Ocean Avenue, eliminating the easternmost walkway.

Flagstone would replace brick in the paths; raised beds would be lowered, and native, drought-tolerant plants and trees would grow in place of the current shrubs and holly tree. Benches would be placed throughout the garden, including a stone one on Ocean Avenue.

Although the garden has changed over the years, architectural historian Sheila McElroy said the proposal "deviates greatly" from 1920s-era photos showing that "with a gentle curvilinear design, the three paths lead the visitor to a main focal point, that of the library entrance."

The new design, however, "generally reverses the plan and de-emphasizes the library entrance," she wrote before concluding the design "is not appropriate for the historic resource."

She and planner Sean Conroy suggested two paths from Ocean and one from Lincoln.

Historic, or not?

While the building itself is historic, von Hasseln argued that the garden has evolved without the benefit of a landscape architect or a firm design.

"The hardscape, grade levels, pathways and landscaping have been changed through the years," she said. "That's why we feel it is not truly an historic garden."

When he was approached to draw the plans, Guthrie's "immediate reaction was the two pathways really are quite redundant and interrupt the garden in an awkward way," she told the committee.

As she began researching the project, von Hasseln asked library staff what they wanted. Access for the handicapped was their top priority, and the reason for the gently sloping path, according to von Hasseln.

"They also said it would be helpful to have more seating, because people like to sit outside with laptop computers and access the wireless service from the library, and of course this was not a consideration in 1927," she continued.

And because the small bench on Lincoln Street is constantly used, the library staff suggested another.

Having two pathways from Ocean Avenue would eliminate that bench and add more hardscape, she pointed out. It would significantly add to the estimated $200,000 cost of the work, which will be covered entirely by donations raised through the garden club.

"It's a lot for our little club, but we think we can do it," von Hasseln predicted.

Coss enthusiastically endorsed the garden club's proposal rather than the three-pathway alternative, which he said divides the garden into pieces that don't harmonize, and he praised the use of low-growing plants that will not obscure the front of the library.

"I think it's a place that is so used by the residents of Carmel that it would be so much more user-friendly with this area outside," he said, referring to the terrace and benches. "And this wonderful swoop for handicap access: Whoever heard of a handicap access being that attractive?"

Committee chair Julie Wendt said the historian's comments should carry more weight.

"I actually like Plan A better from a personal standpoint, but I think we are here to do something other than what we believe personally," she said. "I believe the scope of this project is to breath new life into the garden, not reinvent it."

With commissioner Erling Lagerholm absent, the historic preservation committee voted 3-1 to recommend the planning commission approve the garden club's plans for the Harrison Memorial Library garden. The application must first be heard by the forest and beach commission.

FLORAL WIZARDRY ON DISPLAY FOR LIBRARY GARDEN FUNDRAISER

By MARY BROWNFIELD

A FLORIST educated in Denmark and raised in the business will demonstrate his skills in making "brilliant and uniquely creative" arrangements at a Carmel-by-the-Sea Garden Club Holiday Faire next month to help raise money for the rehabilitation of the Harrison Memorial Library garden.

Kren Rasmussen has developed his horticultural talents while working for 19 years with his father at the family business, Bloomster's, in the Almaden Valley. As a young man attending the University of Copenhagen, he also worked with the Danish Royal Family's florist.

Garden club publicity chairman Bridget Booth praised Rasmussen's fast floral wizardry and penchant for clever arrangements.

"You get a lot of bang for your buck when it comes to ideas," she said. "He's pretty amazing."

Rasmussen's demonstration will be accompanied by a Christmas Boutique featuring wreaths, trees, ornaments and gifts. Refreshments will be served at the Nov. 18 event in the ballroom at the Inn at Spanish Bay beginning at 10 a.m.

Tickets are $30 per person and must be reserved by Nov. 15. Thanks to the generosity of the Pebble Beach Company and the work of garden club members, all proceeds will help pay for the $200,000 restoration of the Harrison Memorial Library garden.

To reserve a ticket, send a check to Carmel-by-the-Sea Garden Club, P.O. Box 1972, Carmel, CA 93921. For more information, call (831) 659-3456.

Dan Hudson, iconoclastic publisher of Monterey County Post, dies at 53

PINE CONE STAFF REPORT

AFTER A long battle with melanoma, Dan Hudson, founder and publisher of the Monterey County Post, died Oct. 11 at Hospice House in Monterey.

"Dan was a Damon Runyon figure who stuck to his niche and was true to his friends, and I really respected him for that," said Cannery Row Co. CEO Ted Balestreri.

Another friend was Clint Eastwood.

"I've known Dan and his whole family for a long time and he was a frequent visitor to Mission Ranch," Eastwood said. "He will really be missed."

"Dan was a great guy, a very old friend and he was really passionate about law enforcement and land use," said Dave Armanasco. "He really put a lot of his soul into his professional endeavors and I admired him for that."

Other important Monterey businessmen, including Charles Chrietberg and Jeff Davi, also told The Pine Cone they were longtime friends of Hudson who were saddened by his passing.

"He really helped me out with my original campaign for supervisor back in 1993,"

Davi said.

Hudson's father, Thomas J. Hudson, served as a county supervisor before his death in a plane crash in 1975. His mother, Jane, still runs the family retail business at The Barnyard. He is also survived by a brother, Tom, and a sister, Sally.

A graduate of RLS school in Pebble Beach and of the Monterey College of Law, Hudson founded the Post because "I wanted to accomplish something that would make a difference, something that would really count," according to an article in the Post's final edition on Sept. 23. For eight years, the paper's focus was "slicing away at crime, cutting away at graft, and shaving the impact of illicit drugs," the article said.

Memorial services will be Oct. 30, 3 p.m., at All Saints Episcopal Church in Carmel. The family requests that contributions be sent to the Central Coast Hospice House, PO Box HH, Monterey CA 93942.

Commission rules leaning tree must stand

By MARY BROWNFIELD

AS A giant Monterey pine fell across Dolores Street in Tuesday's storm and a resident continued her fight to get city reimbursement for damages caused when a tree crashed through her house last February, the Carmel Forest and Beach Commission voted 3-0 Wednesday to deny a Monte Verde Street property owner permission to cut down a large pine he believes is unsafe.

Because the Monterey pine leans and lacks roots on one side, Jeff Britton said he and his neighbors are worried it will fall and damage property or injure someone. In light of the tree's mature age, Britton argued it would make sense to remove the pine now, before a new home is built on his lot on Monte Verde near Fifth Avenue.

But city forester Mike Branson found no signs of disease, insect infestation or structural problems in the 42-inch-diameter pine and said it has apparently grown at a lean. While someone cut some of the roots near a pathway on the property at some point, other roots appear strong and healthy.

"This is a large, healthy pine," Branson concluded in his report to the commission Oct. 20. "I highly recommend pruning to reduce the weight and sail effect in the canopy, as well as removal of the larger deadwood." He said the only other tree on the lot is an 18-inch diameter coast live oak.

The commission agreed, voting 3-0 to follow Branson's recommendations and deny Britton permission to remove the tree. Members Peggy Miller and Kevan Urquhart were absent.

Twenty-five years of FOCUS spell $1.7 million for Carmel schools

By MARY BROWNFIELD

IN THE quarter century since they gathered to become the Friends of Carmel Unified Schools, parents and school staff have raised $1.7 million for books, teaching aids, scholarships and after-school programs. The group will bestow its latest round of large grants on worthy recipients Dec. 8, and board president Sharron Douglas said total gifts should reach $150,000 this year.

"We want to get that money into the hands of teachers and students as soon as possible," Douglas said, but due to the large number of requests, this year's grant announcements had to be pushed back from the fall.

"We needed more time and information from the applicants," she explained.

Comprising two dozen parents and staff from the district's schools, the FOCUS board is considering $160,000 worth of requests and will have about $90,000 to award at the December party in the library at Carmel Middle School.

"The idea is to meet the needs of every school, so they're equally represented on our board," Douglas said.

All year long, the board reviews and grants requests for amounts less than $1,000 and distributes specifically designated donations for scholarships and programs. FOCUS money helps buy books, computers, DVDs, videos and other educational tools "based on what the teachers need and want," but does not pay for capital improvement projects or consumable items, according to Douglas.

Last year, the group distributed an all-time high of $175,000 and was able to meet every large grant request it received.

This year's gifts will likely hit $150,000, according to Douglas, and much of that money was generated by The Quail historic automobile event in August and a golf tournament, dinner and auction at Quail Lodge Sept. 26. The annual telethon and the un-telethon (a mailing campaign) are upcoming and will add to the sum.

The tournament, which attracted 92 golfers and more than 200 dinner guests, netted about $55,000, according to Douglas, who said the top live auction item was orthodontic services. The Quail raised $36,500, mostly for after-school programs and scholarships.

Douglas, who started work at Carmel River School as a teacher in 1969 and retired as principal there just last year, can attest to FOCUS' generosity over the past 25 years. She received one of the district's first computers — an Apple — in 1980, much to the delight of teachers and students alike.

"I have been a beneficiary of many funds, and that's one of the reasons I wanted to work with this organization when I retired," she said. "I saw the impacts."

In 1979 and for the subsequent 11 years, FOCUS awarded about $42,000 annually and has raised and donated $1.7 million to the district since inception.

"So they have come a long way, but of course $42,000 bought a lot more than," she said. "We're hoping to get to $2 million soon, but that

NEW SAFEWAY NEEDS EIR, COMMITTEE SAYS

By CHRIS COUNTS

A PLAN to build a new, 54,000-square-foot Safeway at the Crossroads shopping center needs a costly environmental impact report and cannot be approved without one, the Carmel Valley Land Use Advisory Committee recommended Monday.

"This is a commercial project with significant environmental impacts," said committee chair Janet Brennan.

The proposal by shopping center owner Carmel Valley Partners will add 10 percent to the total square footage of the Crossroads, bringing it to 200,000 square feet. But the new project will break the center into smaller, less bulky buildings, giving it a "more residential" feel that is compatible with its surroundings, according to architect Ray Parks.

County planners said the environmental impacts of the project have already been mitigated by the applicant, and no EIR is required.

Despite that, from the start of the Oct. 18 meeting, it was clear LUAC members were frustrated by the project and the way the county has handled it.

"There have been many legitimate concerns raised," said Brennan. "This project is inconsistent with many aspects of the Carmel Valley Master Plan, and it's unfortunate the county planning staff has to be reminded to follow guidelines."

Brennan said a variety of issues have not been adequately addressed, including traffic congestion, the effect of the project on a levee to control flooding on the Carmel River, and whether exhaust fumes from the diesel trucks that would be needed to remove fill could affect public health.

Crossroads Shopping Village General Manager Cynthia Buhl said she does not believe the project requires an environmental impact report. She also disagreed with the contention that the flood control levee will be less stable.

"Our studies show that our project will strengthen and reinforce the levee," Buhl said.

The committee first considered the merits of the project in April 2002. Through five public meetings, a chief complaint has been the look of the proposed development.

"I am troubled by the design," committee member John Anzini said. "It looks like a Safeway in San Jose."

Committee member Victoria Rugg echoed Anzini's concerns.

"Supposedly this was an original design, but now we see it in other parts of California," Rugg said. "We need to be more subtle, like The Barnyard."

But Parks disagreed the look is cookie cutter. "The design is site-specific," Parks explained. "It is sympathetic to the existing Crossroads architectural style. A lot of compromise and money have gone into this project to make it look more residential."

Alana Knaster, chief assistant director of planning and building inspection for Monterey County, said she and her staff do not see any problems with the new Safeway's design.

"The planner [Taven Kinison Brown] worked extensively with the applicant, and we believe it is consistent with the style of the existing center." Also, Knaster said it is important to stick to county guidelines when evaluating the project because, "otherwise you are at the mercy of everybody's opinion."

As is often the case in Monterey Peninsula development projects, the removal of trees has drawn particular scrutiny. A large Monterey pine tree in front of Longs Drug Store was cut down in February after experts determined it was in danger of falling, leading at least one local resident to suggest the tree's demise was somehow tied to the proposed development project. Rugg did not draw the same conclusion at the meeting, but she objected to the removal of even one more.

"I think every bloody tree should be saved," Rugg said. Buhl said that while the project will remove 27 trees, five significant oaks would be relocated and 91 trees would be planted.

"We will put back five times the number of trees that we

M I L E S T O N E S

A CELEBRATION of the life of ROY GILLIGAN, Carmel mystery writer who died Aug. 6, will begin at noon, Sunday, Oct. 24. Setting is the community room of The Thunderbird Bookshop, The Barnyard, Highway 1 and Carmel Valley Road, Carmel.

All are invited.

ELIZABETH SCHOENBRUN, wife of the late Leo Schoenbrun, died June 23 at the age of 92.

A former resident of Los Angeles, Carmel and Mill Valley, she most recently made her home in Lake Oswego, Ore.

Mrs. Schoenbrun is survived by her children, Richard Schoenbrun of Belvedere; Helen Solinger and Mary Schoenbrun of Oregon; six grandchildren, David and Mari Schoenbrun, Richard and Michael Solinger, Cristina Barclay and Tracy Sinnett; and nine great-grandchildren.

VIRGINIA DEAN JUDSON, a longtime resident of Carmel and Corte Madera, died Sept. 22. She was 94.

Born in Center, Neb., she was the daughter of two Protestant ministers and spent much of her childhood in Brea, Ky. before the family moved to Southern California. She graduated from Oberlin College in 1932 and then returned to the West Coast to live.

Mrs. Judson is survived by her daughter, Annette Peluso of the Monterey Peninsula; a son, Richard Lawrence of Carmel; stepchildren Philip, David and Betsy; nieces Gretchen Dean and Gillian Moran; and nephews Joel Dean, Jurrien Dean and Peter Steffen.

She was preceded in death by her husband, Philip M. Judson; her first husband, Winfield Scott Potter; as well as her brother, Joel P. Dean, and sister, Frances Newlove.

Gifts in her memory may be made to the Berea Fund, Berea College in Berea, Ky.

NANCY J. MODRALL, a resident of the Carmel area since 1979, died Oct. 6.

Mrs. Modrall was an avid gardener who also took great joy in adopting dogs from the SPCA of Monterey County.

She was a regular volunteer at Sunset Theater in Carmel and at the Monterey Jazz Festival.

Mrs. Modrall spent many years as a tutor for adult literacy programs, and as a seeker of ideas, she belonged to numerous book clubs, poetry groups and spiritual circles in the area. She also traveled widely.

She is survived by her sons Jay and Mark; a daughter, Cathryn; grandchildren Daniel, Dora and Thomas; and her cousin, Susan Davis of Carmel.

She also leaves behind her beloved dogs, Pepper, Cindy and Jilly.

Mrs. Modrall's memorial service last week was officiated by Julie Olson, a member of the Eckankar clergy and Nancy's niece.

Donations are suggested to Heifer International (www.heifer.org), a charity that promotes animal husbandry cooperatives in poor regions.

A MEMORIAL service will begin at 12:30 p.m. Tuesday, Oct. 26, at Carmel River State Beach Lagoon for FRANK TORREY CLEARY, a retired real estate broker, who died Oct. 16.

Born in Dallas to Col. Alexander Warner Cleary and Jo Estelle Torrey, he moved with his family to Carmel and graduated from Carmel High School, where he played football in 1950. Mr. Cleary, known by his family as Bud during his early years, attended MPC before enlisting in the Navy, serving two years of active duty with the Sea Bees in French Morocco and Cuba during the Korean conflict.

He married Patricia Hogan in New York City and returned to Carmel to be near his parents. Mr. Cleary attended Hartnell College, where he received his associate's degree, and then transferred to San Jose State University. The couple had five children, and lost their first born, Christopher Bruce, in 1957.

Mr. Cleary returned to Carmel and was one of the first surfers to make his own surfboards. He changed his name to Tor to honor the surname of his mother, and worked as a real estate agent on the Monterey Peninsula and in Sedona, Ariz. He resided briefly in Washington State and then returned to Carmel to be with his children.

He is survived by his brother, Col. Alexander Bruce, U.S. Army (ret.) of Florida; his first wife, Patricia of Carmel; his second wife, Jai of Washington State; four children, Glen and Cheryl, Kim Mitchell and Patricia Roden; five grandchildren; and a great-granddaughter, all of the Monterey Peninsula, and a niece and two nephews.

Memorial contributions may be sent to Meals on Wheels of the Monterey Peninsula, 700 Jewell Ave., Pacific Grove, CA 93950; and/or the Monterey Bay Sanctuary Foundation, 299 Foam St., Monterey, CA 93940.

Two Myths about Heat

At least two odd myths persist about keeping our homes warm. Trouble is, they're old wives' (or husbands'), as the case may be) tales that can cost a sizable sum on your energy bill.

Myth #1: Some people insist that you will use less heat and save more money if you leave your thermostat at one temperature night and day.

Though there may be a vague amount of common sense to such an idea, it is simply untrue. It takes far less energy to warm your home in the morning, having allowed your rooms to settle to a lower temperature in the night. You can go to the bank with this one.

Myth #2: You will get your home—or one room, like your bedroom, perhaps—warmer faster if you turn the thermostat up well beyond the temperature you want to achieve. If you want to heat a room to about 70 degrees, in other words, you can do so more quickly by moving the thermostat up to about 90 degrees.

Again, there is an odd common sense quality to this notion, but it is completely wrong. The room will heat to 70 just as quickly either way, but setting the thermostat at 90 degrees almost always sends your energy use beyond what you would have otherwise needed, and very often leaves you with a room—or house—you need to cool a bit. Schwarzenegger family visits Monterey Peninsula

THE ENTIRE first family of California was in the Carmel area last week, but not at the same time. Early Saturday morning at Chateau Julien on Carmel Valley Road, Maria Shriver (top, center) and her brother, Anthony (at far left), provided a VIP sendoff for bicycle riders on a charity ride to Hearst Castle to raise money for Best Buddies, which pairs volunteers with the developmentally disabled. Surrounding Shriver are her four children, Katherine, 14, Christina, 13 (both at far right), Patrick, 11 (with Mom's hand on his shoulder) and Christopher, 7 (blonde hair). Two days later, Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger was joined by Clint Eastwood and Leon Panetta at Point Lobos as the governor announced an ambitious new plan to protect California's coastline. They got a good laugh when Schwarzenegger congratulated Republican State Senate candidate Abel Maldonado for working the heavily Democratic crowd for votes.

In 1940, Wilson, then Edward Weston's wife, wrote the essay that accompanied his images in her husband's book, "California and the West." In 1937, Weston had been the first photographer to receive a Guggenheim Fellowship. He and Wilson used this funding to take a lengthy journey across the West, with Weston photographing and Wilson writing.

Wilson's 1999 book, "Through Another Lens," described her life with Weston and their creative working partnership that supplied some of the most iconic figure studies in photographic history.

Margaret Weston, was once married to Edward's son, Cole, and Kim Weston, Edward's grandson, spoke of Wilson's life and her contribution to the photographic medium.

ly with the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District and the California Public Utilities Commission in preparation for next week's presentation, he said.

Cal-Am Water Co. is also on board. "We have a letter of intent with the county to work toward a public-private partnership, as long as we move toward our goal of eliminating the overdraft from the Carmel River," said Cal-Am general manager Steve Leonard. "This is the next step on water resources' part to give some people clarity on how we get there."

Even the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District seemed ready to yield to the county water agency.

"Our board's direction is to move forward as quickly as possible and pick the best possible project in terms of cost and yield," said Henrietta Stern, project manager for the MPWMD. "But at its meeting Sept. 29, the board also decided to give the county a chance to assess its role in developing water options."

If approved by supervisors Tuesday, the county water resources agency effort to plan for a regional desal operation would begin with the preparation of Requests for Proposals from engineering and technical firms to work on a Moss Landing desal plant, Weeks said. They would also consult with local governments and water supply organizations to determine how big the plant should be, and set a timetable for setting up a pilot plant to test desal technology against the water available in Monterey Bay.

Leonard said his company would be one of those responding to the county's RFPs, if supervisors decide they should be issued.

"There was nothing before February 2003, but now we're two-thirds of the way through an environmental assessment, and we should have a pretty good shot at it because we're pretty far along," Leonard said.

But an attorney for the Pajaro/Sunny Mesa Community Services District, Marc del Piero, which has a competing plan in the works, said his agency is also well on its way toward building a desal plant in Moss Landing, and he was surprised to learn of Tuesday's meeting from a reporter.

"We have made significant progress, and there's already a huge amount of demolition going on" at the former brick plant, owned by Nader Agha, where Pajaro/Sunny Mesa has leased a site for its desal facility, del Piero said. Next week, the board of directors of PSM will approve financing for a pilot plant, which has already been designed, he added.

He also pointed out that a comparison of desal proposals from Cal-Am and Pajaro/Sunny Mesa showed the PSM plant would cost almost $85 million less to build and would be cheaper to operate.

But Leonard sent a letter to Monterey Peninsula water officials late last month questioning the accuracy of the PSM proposal, which may contain erroneous information about permit timelines, toxic cleanups, litigation and possible growth impacts, Leonard said.

Also, "the concepts of the projects are completely different," he said.

"Our plant would be built in response to specific public needs, whereas the Pajaro/Sunny Mesa plant would be built with a sign out front that said, 'Water for sale,'" Leonard argued. "We're staying out of the growth business."

Del Piero responded: "We are a public agency, not a water company. Our plant was proposed in response to an important public need in North County, and it can do the same thing for Fort Ord and the Monterey Peninsula. I don't know why the county would want to start over from scratch."

Street sweeping hours, days change

DOWNTOWN STREETS will no longer be swept at 4 a.m., according to building official Tim Meroney, and they will only be swept two days a week rather than three. Due to a tighter budget, Meroney said the city's street sweeper will now run in the business district only on Mondays and Thursdays. Sweeping will begin at 5:30 a.m. instead of 4 a.m. On residential streets, sweeping will still begin at 7 a.m. as always, but the sweeper will run on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and every other Friday, rather than the previous three-day-a-week schedule.

After this week's storms, Meroney also wanted to remind residents and businesses that it is illegal to sweep or blow piles of pine needles into the streets.

Anyone with questions can reach Meroney at (831) 620-2010.

law and a friend lost their pets the same way. "It's so unnecessary."

Carlen, a 40-year Peninsula resident, cares fulltime for her bedridden mother, who acquired Velvet as a kitten and moved with her from Philadelphia eight years ago.

Several months ago, her Quail Lodge neighbor told her "over the rosebushes" that the house she was renting was being sold and would be fumigated, but Carlen had no idea when. She said she wasn't notified by the owners of the home, Doug and Lisa Steiny.

"When I left around 1 p.m., Sept. 22, to run errands, the house was quiet, there was no one there — no trucks, no nothing," she said. "When I came home, there was a tent on the house. After I put the dogs to bed a couple of hours later, I called for Velvet, and when she didn't come, I knew where she was."

The black and white cat, who was habitually harassed by the dogs at home, liked to seek refuge in the crawl spaces of neighboring houses. Six days later, after being told her cat could not have been trapped inside the tent, Carlen learned Velvet's body had, indeed, been found.

Carlen blamed the fumigation company workers for failing to search the crawl space underneath the home.

"If those guys had done what they supposedly do and checked every square inch, they would have found her," she said, adding that Velvet's death left her feeling as though she failed to take care of her family. "You would think you could leave your house, and your family is protected. That's the number-one priority in this house, because I have a 93-year-old mother who's dying."

Upset and sympathetic, Doug Steiny took Velvet's body to the vet and paid for her cremation, according to Carlen, and the owner of the pest control company that contracted out the fumigation work sent her flowers. Although those gestures helped ease her pain, they did not dampen her resolve to change the law.

A requirement for advanced written notice would give neighbors a chance to protect their pets and family members, Carlen said, and it wouldn't cost fumigation companies a lot of time or money.

"This was just devastating to me, and the day they found her body, I started with this idea that it shouldn't happen to anybody else," she said.

Last week, executives from the pest control and fumigation companies involved in Phoebe's death said such episodes are unusual, but that posting notices in advance of a tenting might help prevent further tragedies.

SPCA on board

Gary Tiscornia, executive director of the SPCA of Monterey County, said his agency would help draft the legislation and support it.

"I think it would be straightforward and require notification of people within a certain radius of the house being tented," he said. "We wouldn't want it to be so onerous as to require talking to neighbors — that's sometimes difficult — but certainly more than seeing a building under a tent, and certainly with an amount of time in advance to give people the opportunity to safeguard their pets and family members."

The SPCA could help frame the new law and be proactive in contacting elected officials for support and direction.

"I think most homeowners would be happy to know their neighbors are being effectively put on notice of a potentially hazardous situation for pets and family members," he added.

Carlen also approached Monterey County Supervisor Dave Potter's office and Assemblyman John Laird for help.

The legislators agree the idea has merit.

"Apparently it's something that has happened multiple times, and I know I have a very inquisitive cat," Laird said, but he prefers a test locally before putting the work into a statewide bill.

"This was a horrible case, and it's something that should be addressed," he said.

Although he initially said the rule would have to come from Sacramento, Potter said the county could draft an ordinance, working "in concert with the state." He plans to raise the issue at Tuesday's meeting in Salinas.

"What I want people to do is call their representatives on every level, starting with their county supervisors, representatives and senators," Carlen said. "If we put enough pressure on, then we have a good chance of doing this, but we need the community to at least do that."

Allen Funt Ranch

IF YOU'RE lucky enough to visit what the U.S. Forest Service calls "Brazil Ranch," more than 1,000 acres on the south side of the Bixby Creek Bridge,, you'll be amazed at the stunning scenery that was the exclusive province of the ranch's private owners for more than 100 years. Those views, available so far only to limited numbers of the public, didn't come cheap — the U.S. Forest Service bought the property last year with 23 million of the taxpayers' dollars. And even for the few visitors admitted to the ranch, the views are hard to come by. No turnouts make it possible to stop on the old ranch road, no footpath has been built along the edge of the cliff above the awe-inspiring Pacific shore, and there is no readily apparent way to ascend to the massive ridge that parallels Bixby Creek.

Instead, what forest service officials show off the most are the rustic man-made features: An immaculate, graceful barn, a charming caretaker's house, a log cabin overlooking the fences that frame the rolling hills. These are advertised in a full-color brochure as the perfect venue for corporate retreats, benefits and weddings — part of a plan to raise money for their upkeep. A center for environmental studies is on the drawing board; artists are also to be invited to stay at the ranch to draw inspiration from its splendor.

But if the scattered buildings are the ranch's principal feature, and are integral to the forest service's plans for its future, it is ironic that little mention is made of the man responsible for their design and construction. When TV pioneer Allen Funt bought the ranch from the Brazil family in 1977, the place was "a wreck" with "trash everywhere, buildings that were just shacks, fences falling down and meadows that were overgrazed to dirt," according to caretaker John Moon, whose family was profiled in last week's Pine Cone. Funt, with Moon's help, turned the ranch into a showplace worthy of a nature-loving Hollywood star. Now Moon and Funt's son, Peter, are asking the forest service to honor Allen Funt's efforts, and his 20 years of stewardship of one of California's most scenic vistas, by giving the ranch his name.

We certainly agree. Brazil Ranch should be Allen Funt Ranch. An exhibit of his life's work would be appropriate. But the greatest memorial would be preservation in his name of what Allen Funt loved most: the morning mist in the redwood-shrouded canyons, the blazing sun disappearing into the never-ending sea, and the all-encompassing majesty of the Big Sur coast.

Creating Las Vegas

Dear Editor,

In the Oct. 15 Pine Cone, my eye caught the article on the Senior Living page titled: "Live music, art auction, food fest could wake up Carmel" — an article that mentioned a "tentative" meeting to discuss these issues and receive feedback from the residents. With this invitation I would offer some suggestions to these civic-minded and caring members of the community who have suggested some changes to improve the business climate.

Let's face it: Carmel is tired, worn, stodgy, dark and quiet and certainly needs to add some "fun" to an otherwise dull, slow-paced lifestyle. About the most exciting thing right now is watching the sunset at the beach or hearing the roar of the ocean at night, or an occasional encounter with a raccoon. I'm sure we all agree that Carmel needs more visitors whether we're in business or not, but it troubles me greatly that visitors complain that Carmel is no fun after 8 p.m. There is so much potential and so many possibilities to change this gloomy state of affairs. The Carmel Plaza is a good place to start implementing some new ideas. Why not turn the Plaza into a casino, nightclub, maybe a strip joint venue? Those silly islands full of useless trees and shrubs down the middle of Ocean Avenue serve no purpose and could provide extra parking. Hopefully if we get some night life in Carmel the street lighting will be improved and we could finally get some decent cement sidewalks in the residential areas for overflow parking. The unused land at the bottom of Ocean and San Antonio could provide lots of parking, and there could be trolleys to transport people up into the "hot spots" on the main drag. It might also be a good idea to get rid of the ban on neon signs — somehow live music and neon signs go together. Sunset Center is the perfect venue for the

Vaccine shortage explained

Dear Editor,

Attention Democrats and other really deep thinkers! Have you noticed that there is a major shortage of the flu vaccine? Beyond that, have you been informed that half of the supply came from a laboratory in England (recently shut down) and the other half comes from France?

I wonder if it occurs to you (when you are in deep think mode) that there is perhaps something wrong with this picture. How can it be that we no longer have a single supplier in this country? You don't know? Well, let me tell you that a dozen years ago, we had about 23 suppliers of various vaccines here in the USA. The number is now down to about six and none of them produce the flu vaccine, which some people consider unfortunate. For those interested, the reason is that many firms were sued out of existence by the trial lawyers.

Not being a truly deep thinker like you liberals, I find your great affection for those now multimillionaire and sometimes billionaire attorneys a little perplexing, except for the fact that they are second largest contributors to your party. This places them just behind the teachers unions who have done such a fabulous job graduating illiterates from the public schools. Of course, that's another matter.

Not to worry, Democrats, for the welfare of this important constituency. Those like myself may be somewhat unenthusiastic, but you can be sure that Sam Farr, Barbara Boxer and Dianne Feinstein will do everything in their power to keep trial lawyers in the driver's seat. Like you folks, they are liberal Democrats and deep thinkers one and all.

Abuse doesn't require fix

Dear Editor,

I was surprised and saddened by your comment in last week's editorial that you hope somebody can find a way to "fix" the ADA. Just because someone attempts to abuse a law does not mean that it needs to be fixed. I invite you to accompany me and my service dog, Truman, on some errands. I will provide your wheelchair. Afterwards, perhaps you will be kind enough to tell me how the ADA needs to be fixed!

Spay, neuter, or chew?

Dear Editor:

Despite concern over harassment or personal injury, I submit these suggestions for tackling the raccoon problem.

First, I quote from the section on raccoons in the "Oxford Companion to Food": "Typical measurements for a raccoon would be 75 cm (30 inches) for head-plus-body length and 12-15 kg (27-34 lb), so there is plenty of it to be eaten . . . Its largely nocturnal diet of both plant and animal matter is wholesome and it, in turn, provides good eating for human beings. The fat, however, is strong in flavor and smell and best removed before cooking. The lean meat is dark. Roasting is recommended and a number of recipes suggest sweet potatoes as stuffing or accompaniment." Or . . .

Second, establish a raccoon sanctuary, a place, perhaps not unlike a wild animal park, where raccoons may be viewed through a chain-link fence, possibly electrified. Two or three acres ought to do it. Flanders Mansion comes to mind. Or . . .

Third, spay, neuter, then release again, with some fanfare, late at night, scattered, perhaps throughout the Golden Triangle. Or . . .

Fourth, initiate an educational program to consider raccoons as we do other wild animals, like rats, and euthanize the little bastards, then maybe introduce the first point, (above). Or . . .

Fifth, give them names and learn to love them, training them as pets. Or . . .

Sixth, just let the problem recycle as it has for years, and concentrate on more serious problems, like calendars.

Watches, Clocks, Jewelry

Dear Editor,

As I am reading about the confusion here in Carmel among the city fathers about watches and jewelry, it seems to me that there is an important factor ignored: A jeweler can be someone who sells jewelry, also a specialist who can create and fabricate jewelry. A mechanical watch is an extremely high-precision instrument. Only highly qualified craftsmen can understand and repair them. These competent and specialized professionals have to endure an apprenticeship of several years in order to become masters, but may have no ability to create jewelry.

On the other hand, a jeweler may be trained as a goldsmith and also undergo several years of specialized education but may have no idea how to understand or even fabricate an intricate watch. Watches and clocks are mechanical instruments and are in a way related, except the latter may be the giant of the other.

My idea would be that a jeweler who wants to sell watches and clocks needs two business licenses. The same for a watchmaker who wants to sell watches, clocks and jewelry. But please separate the two; they're not the same thing.

Also, you can get competent information from the absolute authority on the subject, the NAWCC. A decision made by the planning commission 20 years ago does not constitute that it was the correct one from the beginning.

Why limit galleries?

Dear Editor,

First the city bans multi-artist galleries, then decides to bring in a multi-artist wholesale auction house to undermine their sales. The annual Carmel Art Festival already provides a gallery-friendly live auction and four days of live music. Why not support the efforts of 100 volunteers in producing this established fundraising event? See www.carmelartfestival.org.

The free market is at work in Carmel; for centuries guilds and business clusters have created information-rich regions that lead to innovation and economies of scale. From textile districts in New York to art colonies in France to high-tech businesses grouped together in the Silicon Valley, creative development flourishes when craftspeople, intellectuals, buyers and sellers cluster together for enrichment. Florence, Catalan and Paris attracted artists and dealers and patrons. These clusters not only drive the economy but can also change the course of history. From the Renaissance to the dot-com explosion, the gatherings of people with similar passions work together to form a fertile creative environment. They all benefit from the audience this dense cluster attracts. A restriction on Carmel galleries would stifle this kind of creative growth and disband the cultural cluster that Carmel has become.

Carmel residents and council members need to know that the major galleries spend more than $100,000 each a year in promotion. As the Carmel Chamber of Commerce lacked the funding for promotion, it was the art galleries that carried the town's PR during the recession. The galleries offer lectures, demonstrations and charity benefits year round. They send out hundreds of thousands of mailings to people all over the country and advertise throughout California and in national publications. Collectors, though fewer since 9/11 and the dot-com crash, travel to Carmel to meet their favorite artist in person. Our clients are upscale visitors who dine out and stay in the hotels. The Carmel Art Festival and the Changing Seasons event bring hundreds of people to town.

Imagine if a city limited museums to a single artist.

Crouch and Farrell then drove the petitions through the rain to Monterey County Elections in Salinas, where registrar of voters Tony Anchondo took custody of them and gave Crouch a receipt.

He has 30 business days to certify the signatures on the petitions, and because "they're up to their eyeballs with the national election" Nov. 2, Crouch suspects he'll need most of that time.

Provided at least 442 signatures — 15 percent of the 2,948 Carmel-by-the-Sea residents who voted in the last gubernatorial election — belong to registered voters in the city, the TOT increase will be placed on the agenda of the next regular city council meeting.

Considering the timing, that will likely be in December.

The council could vote to raise the TOT but it can't alter what's on the petition, she said.

If council members don't approve it — which they are unlikely to do, considering their previously stated opposition to a hotel tax hike — the TOT increase will be put to voters in a special election not earlier than 88 days and not later than 103 days from the date it is presented to council, according to Crouch.

Because the estimated $750,000 raised each year through the increase would be designated for specific uses, the tax would require two-thirds majority approval in order

Committee member Kay Holz responded that the high-tech project seemed inappropriate for a building listed in the National Register of Historic Places.

The committee voted 3-1, with member Kathy Henney dissenting, to recommend the planning commission deny Sprint's application when it considers the request at a public hearing next month. In September, the city council decided that negotiating deals with wireless companies to place their equipment on city-owned property could help boost revenues.

REAL ESTATE

From white hot to red hot — easing market still sizzles

Third quarter report

THE FRANTIC pace of the second quarter real estate market was bound to cool in the third quarter, and it did. The good news, however, is that the quarter was still the second best of all time, exceeded only by the April through June period of this year.

Dollar volume

Dollar volume slipped from $526 million during the second quarter of 2004 to $404 million in the third quarter — still the second best number in history and almost $50 million higher than the previous all-time quarterly high of $359 million in the third quarter of 2003. Last quarter's total was 13 percent higher than the same period last year.

House Talk

By Paul & Nellie Brocchini

The towns with the largest dollar volume gains over last year were Marina, up 100 percent; South Coast, up 91 percent; Carmel, up 34 percent, and Seaside, up 32 percent. The biggest drop was in Pebble Beach, down 21 percent.

The number of transactions, 405 for the quarter, was also down from the incredible level of 477 closed sales in the second quarter and just slightly lower than the 415 sales logged in the third quarter of 2003.

Prices

All of the indices show that interest remains high in Monterey Peninsula real estate. There don't seem to be any really good deals (underpriced listings) and, with property so scarce, it seems highly unlikely that a bubble is about to burst. More probable, one would think, is that prices will begin to flatten. And, although prices are up substantially in all 10 local markets over the same quarter of last year, the steep upward spiral seems to have subsided; prices are at or a little below those of the second quarter.

Carmel, in fact, was dead even with the second quarter. Four of the other markets were down, and five were up. All 10 markets had median selling prices higher than the overall figure for 2003.

It seems logical to conclude that we will have a flattening of prices. Logic, however, is often not a good guide to figuring out our local market.

Another interesting aspect of prices is their distribution. We have modified our "Distribution of Sales Chart" for this report. Before, we started the chart with a column headed sales "Under $200,000." We have eliminated that column and the sales from $200,000 to $299,000 column. This month's chart begins with sales from "$300,000 to $399,000." This column may be headed for extinction too, as only one sale during the quarter fell into that category. We have modified the columns to include one of $600,000 to $799,000, another of $800,000 to $999,000, and one for sales of more than $2 million.

The most popular price range on the Peninsula is $600,000 to $799,000, with 30 percent of sales. Thirty-one of Marina and Seaside sales and all Del Rey Oaks sales were in this category. Twenty-two percent were over $1 million and another 7 percent over $2 million.

Think of that! Almost one in three sales on the entire Monterey Peninsula were over $1 million.

Our Market Barometer, which measures the percentage of listings in escrow, remains strong. On Oct. 1, 50 percent of the listings in Marina were in escrow, topping the chart. Another four markets had readings over 30 percent, and only two — Carmel and Pebble Beach — logged below 20 percent.

So far, 2004 has been an amazing real estate year on the Monterey Peninsula. The market got off to a strong start with $267 million in sales the first quarter and Market Barometer readings that were off the charts presaging the record-break-

Imagine dress shops limited to a single designer. The proliferation of art galleries raises the bar for the existing galleries.

Established galleries bring in an increasingly unique stable of artists to survive. Although 61 new galleries have opened since 2000, many galleries have gone under with the recession — businesses like Fingerhut, Dyanson, Regal Gallery, Richard Thomas, Joie d'Vivre, Silver Light, Yellow Dog, Martin Laborde, Gallery 21, Unique, Smartwear, to name a few.

Most people who work in the retail shops can't afford to live in Carmel. Galleries offer one of the few careers in town where a talented consultant can earn $60,000-$100,000 per year. Collectors can view an original Picasso etched copper plate and the sculpting secrets of a master like Richard MacDonald within one block. There are charming children's artist like Lynn Lupetti and Leonard Filgate's Rip Squeak; there are old master print dealers showing images one might fly to Europe to see. There are artists from England and Zimbabwe. There are nationally respected galleries like William Karges who specialize in showcasing early California impressionists. One can see neo-fauvist Peter Max on Ocean Avenue, and at Trajan, the vibrant paintings of a Catalan fauvist, Anoro. There is art from Russia and Germany and Carmel. Simic Gallery sends out 14,000 invitations to its annual exhibition and hosts a sit-down dinner for 300. Galleries such as Jones and Terwilliger and Hanson Galleries each send out 4,000 pieces of mail a month encouraging collectors to visit Carmel. Galleries support frame shops, camera stores, printers, designers, caterers and grocery stores, and their clients support hotels and restaurants.

Recently, Greens Camera and Carmel Beach Cafe closed after the landlord advertised their spaces one month before they were to renew. The rent increased $48,000 a year in one location and $36,000 in the other. It is the landlords, not the galleries, that have put the small businesses out. Many of these properties are owned free and clear by families. Look to these families to secure the diversity of shops. The rent hikes have wiped out shoe stores, crafts stores, gift stores and markets. Many of the galleries are opened by strong art consultants who sell $500,000-$1,000,000 a year in art in a larger gallery and strike out on their own to create a unique and better artist stable. These are not out-of-town conglomerates or big-box stores. These are longtime supporters of Carmel taking a risk to realize a dream. By investing their resources, time and talent in helping artists succeed, galleries have replaced the churches and patrons of previous centuries as sponsors. If the craft shops, shoe-repair stores, gelato and camera shops are to return, a cap needs to be placed on rents. The free market is at work and the finances have shown that art galleries are desirable and sought-after businesses. I can't believe that a town council has the right to prioritize single-product stores. If this model were successful, malls would wrap the earth. We would have to spend a day just visiting the sock stores.

Flu shot help

Dear Editor,

Just a note of appreciation to the manager and employees of Mid-Valley Safeway for easing our two-hour wait for flu shots. They offered us stools to sit on, bottles of water and even broke open cartons of cookies to nibble on.

Our sincere thanks for their many kindnesses.

A story every newcomer should read

Dear Editor,

Many thanks to Pine Cone Editor Paul Miller for the excellent article on Carmel's love of trees (In Your Dreams special section, Oct. 15). The photographs of houses and fences which have been built around trees rather than chopping them down are wonderful.

Well done! I wish every newcomer to Carmel could read this.

Surprise gets a helping hand

Dear Editor,

Our family has been visiting your fair city each year since our first visit 36 years ago on our honeymoon. This year we brought our three daughters, ages 21, 17 and 13, as well as our 20-year-old toy poodle and her 7-year-old male offspring, Surprise. We arrived the last week of August, eager to visit old haunts and rekindle past memories.

Our first night in our honeymoon cottage, we went next door to visit friends and watch the Olympics on their TV. While there, Surprise decided to look for us and jumped out of an open window in our cottage. When we returned to the cottage, he was nowhere to be found. We began an immediate search of Carmel. Several people referred us to the Carmel Police Department. After we described Surprise to them, they asked if we were from Glendale. They then advised us that Surprise had been hit by a car 10 blocks from our cottage and was taken to an emergency veterinarian clinic near Carmel.

As a result of our inquiries, we learned that an angel named Carrie heard Surprise scream when he was struck by a Suburban. She looked out her bedroom window and saw two cars stopped in front of her home and several people standing around a little dog lying in the street. She immediately rushed out to see what had happened. She literally swooped down and began to minister to Surprise. She immediately took charge of the situation and ordered bystanders to call her veterinarian, call the police, get her a blanket as Surprise was going into shock and get her a piece of cardboard so she could move him without causing him further injury. She then insisted that a police officer who had arrived on the scene escort her to an emergency veterinarian, which the officer did. This angel insisted that the veterinarian on duty not destroy her new-found friend. The next morning, we picked up Surprise and took him to Santa Cruz, where he underwent surgery to install two metal plates and screws to repair his badly fractured pelvis. Miraculously, he suffered no other internal injuries.

We are eternally grateful to the caring people of Carmel, as well as the police department, and everyone who took the time to help a little injured dog that was lost. What could have been a tragedy for our family had a happy ending. You see, Surprise is a very special friend to our 21-year-old daughter, who has disabilities. We thank the citizens as well as the police officers of the magical city called Carmel-by-the-Sea.

are required to," explained Buhl.

Another concern raised at the meeting was how the project will affect local businesses.

"I gave you a petition with 1,800 signatures," said Carmel Valley resident May Waldroup, whose family built The Barnyard and sold it last year for $13.4 million to the SIMA corporation of Santa Monica. "I believe that a big box, like the Safeway that will be going in, will be a hazard to local merchants."

But Buhl said the opposite was true.

"We have a Safeway already," she said. "Offering better services helps everybody. We're looking at ways to better serve this community."

The project goes before the Monterey County Planning Commission on Nov. 10.
