Council: Altered home hardly historic

By MARY BROWNFIELD

THE CARMEL City Council unanimously voted this month to overrule the historic resources board and remove an 81-year-old home from the city's inventory of buildings that must be preserved. Norman and Eleanor Moscow's appeal was the second of many the council is likely to hear. About one-third of the 300 property owners whose buildings were designated historic by the city have appealed, and so far the HRB has granted 15 and denied 14 — of which the council has now overturned two. Another seven were withdrawn.

Principal planner Brian Roseth recommended the council side with the Moscovs because of the changes made to their home since its construction.

"The critical issue is the degree to which past remodels have affected the integrity of the design," he said of the "vernacular structure" that incorporates elements of Tudor and Craftsman styles and is "a representative example of the creativity and individualism in residential design in the city in the 1920s," according to consultant Kent Seavey's historical evaluation.

Prior owners added a bedroom visible from the street in 1945, and a 1999 remodel changed the roof pitch and altered the garage. Nonetheless, Seavey said the changes did not affect the character of the home, and he included it on the list that was certified by the California Coastal Commission as part of the city's Local Coastal Program in fall 2004. A year ago, in keeping with the LCP, the city sent letters to 300 property owners advising them their buildings were considered historic and must be preserved. The designations would be recorded on the properties' deeds.

The Moscovs appealed to the HRB, but in January the board voted 3-2 to deny their request to take the home off the list.

"The board determined the additions were in keeping with the design of the historic structure," Roseth said, so the Moscovs took their case to the council. "In this case, staff does not concur with the board — we're concerned there have been too many alterations to the building — so staff is recommending the appeal be granted."

The Carmel Historic Resources Board let the owners of four properties off the hook this month but kept three others on the historic inventory. It didn't decide the fate of this house, which some say was built by prolific Monterey Peninsula artist Jo Mora. See story, page 23A.

Norman Moscow said June 6 he and his wife bought the house because it was "recently renovated, expanded and updated."

"We were surprised to learn this house had been declared historically significant," he said.

They hired consultant Meta Bunse, who reported several exterior doors and windows had also been updated, the chimney was rebuilt and covered with stucco, decks were added and the formerly Carmel stone patio was resurfaced with bluestone.

"Our Carmel cottage is a charming cottage, but it does not rise to the level of being historically significant," Moscow said.

Desal foes may put down their dukes and ally

By KELLY NIX

IN SURPRISING news this week, the two companies racing to build the first desalination plant for the thirsty Monterey Peninsula announced they may stop vigorously competing and join forces.

California American Water Co. and Poseidon Resources Corp. — a developer working with Pajaro/Sunny Mesa Community Services District — revealed they are discussing a partnership to build a single desalination plant, a powerful move they contend would improve service and expedite a drought-free water supply for the Peninsula and other areas of Monterey County.

News of a possible alliance is a curve ball, since Cal Am, and Poseidon and Pajaro/Sunny Mesa, have been independently pursuing permits for large-scale desal projects just down the road from each other.

"It's in the public's interest that these two separate activities will ultimately merge into one," said Peter MacLaggan, senior vice president of San Diego-based Poseidon. "It will result in overall lower cost to the ratepayers and better service."

The two private companies have had about a half-dozen informal talks, beginning when Poseidon was hired by Pajaro/Sunny Mesa, the water district that supplies water to Pajaro and two subdivisions just south of the town.

Joining forces "has been our intent all along," MacLaggan said. "Basically, we view [P/SM's] desal project as nothing more than a logical extension of the Coastal Water Project to address all the regional water needs. We see both projects as very complementary to each other. It has been suggested that Cal Am and Pajaro/Sunny Mesa are in competition with each other, but we don't see it that way."

Cal Am wants to build a $190 million facility called the Coastal Water Project, a 10-million-gallon-per-day desal plant at the Moss Landing power plant.

Meanwhile, Pajaro/Sunny Mesa wants to build its Monterey Bay Regional Seawater Desalination Project, a $132 million, 20-million-gallon-per-day desal operation just down the road at the former National Refractories and Minerals Corp. site.

A jointly run, 20 million-gallon-per-day desal plant would provide enough water for the Monterey Peninsula, North Monterey County, portions of the Pajaro Valley Water Management Agency service area and P/SM's service area. It would also allow Cal Am compliance with a state order to reduce pumping from the Carmel River.

Forces rally to save Bates postal cartoons

By MARY BROWNFIELD

"THE WHOLE village is in shock, because they had been up for so long," Bill Bates said of his drawings that hung on the walls of the Fifth Avenue post office for two decades.

The longtime Pine Cone cartoonist's work was taken down last week at the bidding of a U.S. Postal Service "retail standardization team."

"They've just taken away another tradition," he continued.

"I hate to see every establishment made to fit into a bureaucratic mold, and I think the Bill Bates cartoons spoke volumes about the quirkiness of Carmel that made it charming to so many," commented Carmel Mayor Sue McCloud, who said she contacted postal services officials in San Jose. "I intend to persevere."

Former Carmel City Councilwoman Barbara Livingston asked U.S. Congressman Sam Farr to get involved:

"Carmelites are up in arms over this and are hoping that you, as our representative in the U.S. Congress, will intervene to convince the post office people to put back the Bill Bates cartoons," she wrote in a June 27 e-mail.

On Wednesday, she said Farr responded and plans to meet with local postal service officials next week.

It's unknown what will happen to the artwork, which is owned by Bates but had been on permanent loan since for-

Incorporation showdown on hold as

By CHRIS COUNTS

THE DRIVE to turn Carmel Valley into a city remained stalled after the Local Agency Formation Commission turned down another offer by proponents this week to defend the agency against a legal challenge.

Meanwhile, a July 9 deadline looms for opponents to come up with $25,000 to fund a state review scrutinizing the economic viability of the proposed city.

LAFCO worries about lawsuits

In a closed-door meeting June 26, LAFCO rejected the proponents' latest offer to protect the agency against a lawsuit. Neither incorporation drive leader Max Chaplin nor LAFCO executive officer Kate McKenna would disclose the terms of the offer. McKenna simply called it "insufficient."

The agency has insisted proponents pay $500,000 to indemnify LAFCO. Proponents initially argued they should not have to incur such costs and later offered the pro bono legal services of prominent land use attorney Michael Stamp as security against a legal challenge. LAFCO turned down the offer.

Chaplin said proponents continue to negotiate with LAFCO over indemnification.

Monterey firm gets $100K to woo tourists

By MARY BROWNFIELD

A MONTEREY advertising firm won a $100,000, one-year, "destination marketing" contract from the City of Carmel. The council unanimously decided to hire Anda/Burghardt Advertising June 13 to help boost tourism by bringing mid- to high-income consumers to town, especially during slower months.

The award-winning firm specializes in hospitality, according to Carmel native Jeff Burghardt, who owns it with Ismael Anda.

Clients include Sunset Center, the Pebble Beach Company and international wine brands such as Australia's Penfolds and Rosemount Estate.

Burghardt proposed using various media — including the Internet, direct mailing and visual displays — to market the city. The firm suggested spending $75,000 on marketing and $25,000 on public relations, with the scope of work to include market research and a marketing and media plan due Aug. 1. Among the company's ideas for the city are gift cards to boost business downtown, development of a promotional website and database of likely customers, development of partnerships with appropriate brands, creation of a promotional map and member marketing handbook, and event marketing. It will develop a crisis communications plan, feature story ideas and "exclusive PR opportunities" to pitch to journalists. The firm will provide oral quarterly reports and a written annual report to the council.

"The two most crucial variables that dictate a brand's identity are how it is positioned within the minds of consumers or trade, and what kind of living personality the brand projects," Burghardt told the council. "It sounds airy fairy and kind of bizarre, but this is how you want to look at things."

As a sample campaign targeting Northern California travelers, Burghardt presented, "On the Road to Paradise [All on a Tank of Gas]: Carmel-by-the-Sea — Just down the road and just this side of heaven." He advised expanding the consumer base "with a hip, new image," and said success depends on attracting visitors, selling the experience, creating memories and enticing them to return.

According to the staff report by community services manager Christie Miller, Anda/Burghardt was the top choice of four firms that submitted proposals to the city. Council member Paula Hazdovac, Carmel Chamber of Commerce CEO Monta Potter, Carmel Plaza marketing manager Ryan Williams and Miller inter-

Trespassing charges filed against C.V. resident for feeding dog

By CHRIS COUNTS

A RIPPLING River resident and activist charged with trespassing is set to be arraigned in court June 30, but she claims she was only providing food and water for a dog she believed was neglected.

Helaine Clark was charged with illegally entering private property after a neighbor witnessed her giving food and water to Montana, a golden retriever, at a Calle de los Helechos residence May 28. According to Monterey County Sheriff's Sgt. John DiCarlo, resident, Michael Cappitti requested Clark be charged with trespassing after previously warning her to stay off his Carmel Valley property.

Clark said she routinely passed the property on walks through the neighborhood and adjacent Garland Ranch Regional Park. On May 28, she noticed four empty bowls lined up in Montana's yard.

"It was day two of a three-day weekend, and there were no signs that anyone was home," Clark recalled. "I said to myself, 'They might not be back for one more day.' It was just my motherly instinct to give her food and water."

Clark said it wasn't the first time she worried about Montana's welfare. Several months earlier, while passing by, she found a gate open and closed it. She said a resident admonished her for shutting the gate. Later, Clark found Montana roaming the neighborhood and returned her to the yard.

Clark was charged with violating section 602(j) of the California Penal Code, which states entry is prohibited "on to any land, whether open to the public or not, for the purpose of injuring any property or property rights, or with the intention of interfering, obstructing or injuring any lawful business or occupation carried on by the owner, owner's agent, or person in lawful possession."

But Clark claims a different CPC section vindicates her actions.

According to section 597(e), a person who fails to provide a pet with food and water is guilty of a misdemeanor, and if the animal goes hungry for more than 12 hours, "it is lawful for any person, from time to time, as may be deemed necessary, to enter into and upon any pound in which the animal is confined, and supply it with necessary food and water so long as it remains so confined. Such person is not liable for the entry and may collect the reasonable cost of the food and water from the owner of the animal."

As she prepared for her court date, Clark expressed puzzlement over the charges.

"This is where 'No good deed goes unpunished' comes from," she said.

A DESIRED HOME FEATURE

We're looking here at an answer to the often-asked question, "Is there anything I can do to my home that will increase its value in a cost-effective way?" And again remember that you can live in and improve a house for two years, then sell it and pocket all the profits tax-free under current tax code.

One of the most desired special features in a home today is a workable home office. It can be in an alcove, in a spare room, even making up only part of the room, but it has to be a distinct area, not one that is set up for multiple uses.

Whats most important here? Two things: The wiring of the office with multiple strong electric outlets, with telephone lines (even if you only use one, it's good to wire in advance for the capability to use two lines in the office), and for the computer. Second, lighting and comfort. The space shouldn't be cramped, cannot have poor lighting, and must allow for an ergonomically sensible workspace.

When your house is on the market, this is one of the things that will give it a strong and immediate advantage over other homes for sale and bring in a better price. For help with all your real estate needs call Maureen at 622-2565 and visit her website at www.maureenmason.com.

Burglary suspect arrested in Seaside

POLICE SEARCHED the Seaside home of 28-year-old Julie Arthur Thursday morning and reported finding stolen property linking her to several Monterey Peninsula burglaries.

Carmel Police Sgt. John Nyunt said Arthur, who was arrested June 29, is suspected in a June 22 break-in at a Santa Fe Street residence. A witness who reported seeing a woman burglarizing the home around 10 p.m. provided a license plate number to police.

Working with Seaside and Monterey officers, Carmel police served the search warrant at Arthur's Fremont Street home around 8:30 a.m. and discovered property possibly linked to a number of cases, including burglaries under investigation by the Monterey County Sheriff's Office. The items included a tea set, an iPod, silverware and laptop computers.

Nyunt said investigators from the various agencies will determine whether to charge her in their cases. CPD Sgt. Mike Calhoun said she might also be responsible for the June 23 break-in at a Mountain View home in which a television was taken.

Hotels hit

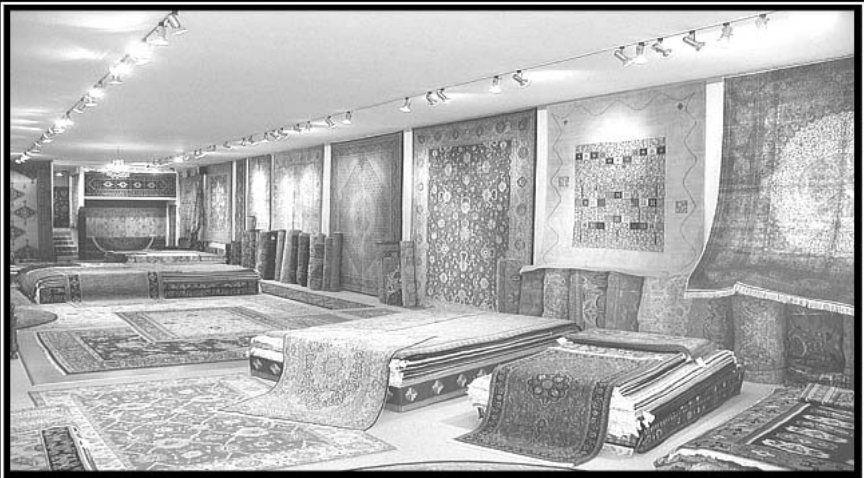

Carmel police are investigating the burglary of a San Carlos Street hotel and an attempted break-in at another a few blocks away. Calhoun said someone broke the window in a door to gain entry to the office at the Dolphin Inn, then pried a wall-mounted lockbox loose. The box contained keys and a small amount of cash.

A thief also tried to break the door at the Wayside Inn on Mission Street but fled when a hotel patron entered the area.

State celebrates Asilomar's renaissance, golden anniversary

By CHRIS COUNTS

WHEN THE California Department of Parks and Recreation acquired an aging and unwanted seaside summer camp called Asilomar in the summer of 1956, it did so begrudgingly.

Now, a half century later, state parks is celebrating its 50th anniversary this week as the landlord of Asilomar State Beach and Conference Grounds, a popular retreat with a rich and colorful history.

Retreat-by-the-sea gets its start

The story of Asilomar began in 1897. The Young Women's Christian Association — which sprung up as a support system for young women who were pouring into big cities in search of low-paying jobs — was searching for a location to host its first western regional conference.

The first conference was held at Mills College in Oakland. Then, from 1900 to 1911, the Hotel Capitola, located near the beach in Santa Cruz, hosted the conference. But the old hotel burned down in 1912, and at the encouragement of benefactor Phoebe Apperson Hearst (mother of the newspaper mogul), the YWCA decided to build a retreat center on 30 acres in Pacific Grove. Acclaimed architect Julia Morgan was commissioned to design its first buildings. A contest led to the adoption of the name Asilomar, which essentially means "Retreat by the Sea." By the summer of 1913, the newly christened center was open for business.

Pirates add color

For the next two decades, Asilomar emerged as not only an idyllic getaway for thousands of young women, but as a source of summertime income for college students. Initially, the center hired female students to perform many of the menial chores during conferences. It is likely there was some resentment between conference-goers and staff — the new employees were dubbed the Stuck-ups, a name they embraced with glee.

Later, male college students were hired for summer jobs and, like their female counterparts, soon managed to get into mischief. They were called Pie Rats due to their habit of stealing pies from the center's kitchen, a name they not only adopted but altered to the more formidable Pirates. Tales are still told of their escapades, which often involved dressing up as pirates. At first, the young men lived in tents. In 1923, Morgan was commissioned to design "proper housing" for the boys that was enthusiastically adorned with masts, pirate flags and even a parrot for a mascot.

From feast to famine

Asilomar's Golden Era came crashing down with the stock market in 1929. By 1933, with the Great Depression wreaking havoc around the world, the YWCA decided to close Asilomar. In the late 1930s, the property was leased to investors who unsuccessfully tried to operate the center as a motel. During World War II, the YWCA converted its facilities to housing for military and their families. After the war, while seeking a buyer for the property, the YWCA reopened Asilomar as a full service conference center.

Meanwhile, local residents feared the loss of Asilomar. There was even talk of a sand extraction operation moving onto the site.

A controversy raged in the local editorial pages, and the mayor of Pacific Grove, John Nelson, created a Save Asilomar committee. The city began lobbying state parks to buy the property.

"Newton Drury, who was head of state parks at the time, was very interested in the sand dunes," explained Allyn Kaye, state parks sector supervisor. "The YWCA said, 'If you want the dunes, you have to take on the buildings.'"

Senator Fred Farr helped to draft a bill that would have made Asilomar a state park, but Governor Goodwin Knight, worried about the center's economic viability, vetoed the legislation. State finance director John Pierce argued Pacific Grove residents should fund the venture since they were the ones who wanted to save it.

our own independent fire department,” councilman Erik Bethel said at the Carmel City Council meeting June 6 before casting the sole vote against spending $7,529.08 to participate in a feasibility study on combining Carmel, Pacific Grove and Monterey fire departments. “I support having our own independent fire department, with our own fire chief.”

Spearheaded by Monterey F.D. and with Pacific Grove already on board, the study will analyze the benefits and drawbacks of combining firefighting forces on the Peninsula. Citygate Associates LLC, which recently reviewed the consolidation of Marina and Seaside fire departments, will receive a total $50,000 for the work, with Monterey paying $33,100.77 and P.G. pitching in $9,370.14.

“Participation in this joint study is consistent with Carmel’s desire to further explore opportunities for sharing of government services,” police chief George Rawson wrote in a report to the council. “There may be a potential for cost savings by expanding the existing shared services agreement with another jurisdiction as it relates to administration, supervisory and training of the fire service.”

The city currently pays P.G. $90,000 per year for the services of Pacific Grove Fire Chief Andrew Miller, assistant chief David Brown and other staff. CFD last had its own chief in March 2001, when Bill Hill retired.

“This does not obligate us to do it or even indicate that we might do it,” councilman Mike Cunningham said. “It’s just an honest investigation so we can make a rational decision rather than just staying the course. We have to be exploring these options.” The council voted 4-1 to participate.

Red Cross’ high standards honored

THE CARMEL chapter of the American Red Cross announced it is one of 10 chapters in California and the Pacific Islands to have met all 47 of the national organization’s standards of excellence — an honor shared with 89 of the 1,000 chapters throughout the United States. The standards focus on policies, practices and capacity in six categories: governance, financial strength and stability, service delivery, human resources, business practices, and “organizational unity and corporate citizenship.” The Carmel chapter also received the annual Pacific Diamond Award for Financial Stability.

MacLaggan said any partnership would likely begin with Cal Am and Poseidon comparing notes on their respective desal pilot plant operations, which are to serve as testing beds for the larger facilities. Cal Am's pilot plant, manufactured by the Spanish company Pridesa, arrived in Moss Landing last week.

"It would make sense for both entities to do pilot plant work on one site," he said. "If we could run both of those side by side, we could run their operating capabilities and refine their design better than if we did independent studies."

Neither company, however, can begin operating their pilot plants until they receive permits from the California Coastal Commission. The commission appealed a permit granted to P/SM by the county's planning department.

Catherine Bowie, Cal-Am's community relations manager, confirmed the company is considering teaming up with Poseidon.

"We are interested in entering into any partnership that would help us meet Order 95-10 [to pump less water from the Carmel River] and expedite a desalination project for the Monterey Peninsula," she said.

Bowie, like MacLaggan, said a joint venture desal project could make the expected high water rates a bit cheaper.

"Certainly, if it is a regional project, the cost will be lower per acre-foot," she said. "The more customers, the more people you have to divide the capital cost."

The more the merrier

MacLaggan said the idea to work with Cal Am is nothing new. In fact, he said there is language in Poseidon's contract with P/SM, signed in July 2005, that states Poseidon would seek allies.

"As far as Pajaro/Sunny Mesa is concerned," MacLaggan said, "they are completely flexible with respect to how this project gets done. Not only a partnership with Cal Am and Poseidon, but with all the other public agencies in the area."

MacLaggan revealed news of a possible affiliation at a Managers Working Group meeting June 26. The group, which includes Monterey Peninsula Water Management District General Manager David Berger and Monterey County Water Resources Agency General Manager Curtis Weeks, meets regularly to discuss regional water issues.

"We have just been quietly going on with our business," MacLaggan said. "It wasn't our intent to keep it secret."

Berger said he didn't know if an alliance would move the project more quickly but said it could remove some regulatory hurdles.

"It would address the requirement of the County of Monterey that any desal plant be owned by a public entity," said Berger, adding he wasn't endorsing any partnership. "That is something that Cal Am as a private company can't meet" on its own.

And a formal agreement between Cal Am and Pajaro/Sunny Mesa and Poseidon might also appease the coastal commission.

"The coastal commission staff doesn't believe that it is good public policy to have desal plants intended to be used for public consumption, to be owned by private companies," he said. "They want public ownership."

MacLaggan said Poseidon, which operates the Carlsbad desalination plant, is stewing over several different ideas, which could include allowing other players in the water business to enter into the equation.

"What is contemplated here is that Pajaro/Sunny Mesa or some combination of other agencies, maybe P/SM and other water retailers and management districts, would own the facility, and we would contract with that entity to similarly engineer and construct the plan and deliver water to them on a wholesale basis," he said.

Poseidon could also sell water to P/SM and Cal Am. Or, Cal Am could own 50 percent interest in the project, MacLaggan said.

In any case, MacLaggan said the National Refractories location and the Moss Landing power plant are viable options for a joint desal plant, with one not necessarily favored over the other.

"I think either site is acceptable in terms of where you could locate this," he said. "All of this technology is modular."

MacLaggan said further analysis will determine how much savings could be passed on to customers, but he estimated $100 to $200 less per acre-foot.

Pajaro/Sunny Mesa has figured its plant could produce an acre-foot of water for about $1,352, while Cal Am estimates $1,944 from its operation.

A joint pilot study "could turn into a long-term effort to jointly pursue a regional solution for the water supply needs," MacLaggan said, "with the caveat that Cal Am has an immediate, pressing need to address their obligations." In 1995, the State Water Resources Control Board ordered Cal Am to cut its pumping water from the Carmel River or face heavy fines.

New detailed study released

Ironically, the news of a possible partnership coincides with a detailed study just released by the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District comparing Cal Am and P/SM's desal proposals as well as the MPWMD's own proposed plant in Sand City.

The water district, which was expected to outline the report at a board workshop Thursday night, hired Bookman-Edmonston/GEI Consultants to review the three projects.

The study, released June 20, "doesn't try to evaluate one being better than the other," Berger said. "The significant part, is it is the first independent, expert, unbiased evaluation of these projects. We think that is very valuable to our board and for the people in the community."

MPWMD will use the 77-page study, which was to cost $55,000 or less, to make recommendations on each project's technical merit, completeness and viability.

The report noted Cal Am's project would have no more adverse impacts on aquatic resources than the Moss Landing power plant does, and that there is no evidence the cooling water system used by P/SM's proposed project would result in an adverse impact to the populations of fish and invertebrates inhabiting Moss Landing Harbor, Elkhorn Slough or Monterey Bay.

The water district's Sand City Desalination Project would use horizontal-drilled or radial-collector wells located on the coastal beachfront of Sand City. Because the seawater intake would be located below the ocean floor, it is not expected to have potential environmental impacts from water withdrawal. However, the report indicated, additional studies are needed to determine the efficiency of the system.

The coastal commission is expected to discuss its appeal of Pajaro/Sunny Mesa's pilot plant permit at an August meeting in Los Angeles, the same meeting during which commissioners will address Cal Am's pilot plant permit.

INCORPORATION

"We're still at it," he said.

McKenna, who confirmed talks will continue, said the incorporation process can't move forward until the indemnification stalemate is broken.

"The dialogue is continuing," she said. "We're still hoping to reach a resolution."

Once the two sides reach an agreement, LAFCO will schedule a special public hearing, presumably in October.

"This is the meeting everyone has been waiting for," explained McKenna. "The entire incorporation proposal would be up for action."

The hearing will not only offer local residents a chance to comment on the proposed boundaries of incorporation, it will present LAFCO with an opportunity to approve or deny the incorporation proposal. If commissioners approve it, an election could be scheduled as early as June.

To fund or not to fund a study?

Opponents of incorporation — who have argued the financial data the feasibility of incorporation is based on is outdated — announced a month ago they are willing to spend at least $25,000 on a state review scrutinizing the economic viability of the proposed city. California law allows for the review of an incorporation's fiscal analysis by the state controller's office, provided the party requesting the audit will pay for it.

So with the deadline fast approaching, will opponents pull the trigger on the study and spend the money?

"We've raised the $25,000," said opponent Bob Sinotte. "But we have yet to make up our minds about spending the money. We feel we have just as good a chance convincing people the numbers are stale as paying for a study which tells us the numbers are stale."

LAFCO meets again June 24. For more information, visit www.co.monterey.ca.us/lafco or www.townofcarmelvalley.org.

Salinas Rural firefighters get behind wheel of prototype

By MARY BROWNFIELD

MAZDA, WHICH has spent millions of dollars to sponsor and fix up Laguna Seca Raceway, donated the two-year lease of a prototype hybrid SUV to the fire district that protects racers, spectators, campers and everyone else at the track.

Company representatives and track general manager Gill Campbell delivered the keys to Salinas Rural Fire District firefighter Justin Reyes last Wednesday.

Jay Amestoy, vice president of public and government affairs for Mazda, said the automaker decided to loan 30 Tribute hybrid SUVs to fire departments following the devastating Southern California fires of 2003.

"Our idea was to give to the fire agencies that helped," he said.

With SFRD supporting the racetrack that bears Mazda's name, handing over a Tribute for two years made sense, he said. The four-wheel drive SUV, built by Ford for Mazda as a test vehicle, is 99.4 percent cleaner and 30 percent to 40 percent more fuel efficient, according to Amestoy. Fire departments receiving 30 tributes will save money on vehicle and operations costs, and Mazda will receive valuable feedback before it begins building the SUVs for sale.

Reyes, who took charge of fire operations at the track for SFRD three years ago, said the prevention bureau will use the SUV for inspections and education.

And, of course, firefighters will drive it while responding to situations at the track.

"We appreciate the opportunity and will get back to you in two years to let you know what we think," Reyes said after accepting the keys and a commemorative plaque.

PACIFIC MOTOR SERVICE
YOUR AUTO COLUMN

Presented by Kevin & Sue Anne Donohoe

TACKLING A TRANSMISSION

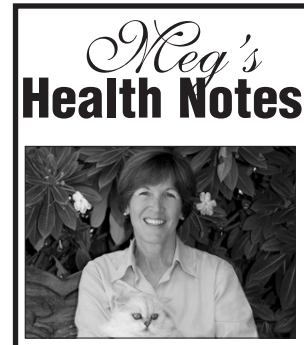

If your vehicle is equipped with an automatic transmission, be advised that abuse and negligence can lead to costly repairs. With this in mind, maintain the transmission fluid at the proper level, and note any burnt odor or off-color. One of the first signs of trouble is delayed engagement, which occurs when there is a longer-than-normal delay between the shift from Park into Drive. There should also be a smooth shift without delay from Park into Reverse. If there is a jerk or a long delay, the transmission should be checked by a technician. Also, take note of anything less than smooth transitions through the forward gears. Generally speaking, the quicker you address transmission problems, the less costly the repair.

Does your transmission show any of the mentioned signs of fatigue? If so please consult an automotive technician as soon as possible. Transmissions don't fix themselves, and it can be difficult to assess a problem. Entrust your car to us. We are located at the corner of Figueroa and Franklin, just west of Jack's Park in Downtown Monterey. We are the oldest independent repair facility in Monterey going...and growing!

P.S. If there is a persistent red fluid leak under your vehicle, have the transmission and power-steering system checked.

Kevin and Sue Anne are the owners of Pacific Motor Service located at 550 E. Franklin St. here in Monterey. Phone: 375-9571 Green Business Program

Meg's Health Notes

Presented by Meg Parker Conners, R.N.

WOULD A LIFT CHAIR HELP?

Seat lifts serve a valuable purpose in homes occupied by an individual who is challenged by rising out of a recliner or armchair. These lifts allow occupants to gently move from a sitting, standing, or reclining position (into or out of the chair) with the click of a button. And under certain conditions, patients may qualify for reimbursement from Medicare or their health insurance company. For reimbursement, the patient must have severe hip or knee arthritis or neuromuscular disease, the lift must be doctor-prescribed as part of the patient's treatment, and the patient must be completely incapable of rising without assistance from a regular armchair or other chair. Once standing, however, the patient must be able to move without assistance.

Industrial designers are addressing the problems of the elderly or infirm by designing a wide range of aids for daily living. However, more assistance is often needed. This can range from running errands and providing companionship to meal preparation. HELP-AT-HOME, a domestic referral service. We provide affordable in-home care options to meet your specific needs. Please call (831) 655-1966 or (831) 655-5014.

P.S. Position lift chairs and recliners are available in a variety of styles, fabrics, and colors, so they look good in any home.

Meg Parker Conners is an RN and owner of Victorian Health Care Services, Victorian Residential Care Homes and Help-at-Home, a domestic referral service here in Monterey. For assistance, call 655-1935.

City to audit P.G. Muni Golf Links pro shop for first time

By KELLY NIX

PACIFIC GROVE next week will perform the city's first audit of operations at the municipal golf course, a long overdue step officials say will aid the city when it takes over the links next year.

The audit, to begin next week and be completed within two weeks, will be the city's first official look at the pro shop's books since Pete Vitarisi began operating it more than 30 years ago.

"They have never been completely audited," said city manager Jim Colangelo. "Just these two-page things that said they have compared the register tape to what they reported to us and to what they received."

Although the city always had the option of auditing Vitarisi once a year, for some reason it never happened, Colangelo said.

"As to why the city didn't do it, I don't know," said Colangelo, who was hired by the city about a year ago. "I think it's good to do on a periodic basis."

The fiscal analysis, being performed by San Francisco Bay Area-based Harvey Rose Accountancy Corporation, is part of a second review the city ordered to show where it stands financially.

Colangelo said the audit, which will cost about $9,000, will provide a detailed snapshot of how the municipal golf shop is run.

The city council voted June 7 to take over the golf course when operator Vitarisi's lease runs out at the end of the year.

Golf superintendent Mike Leach said he has advocated for a complete audit every year since he began working for the city in 1992 but met resistance from the city's previous finance director.

According to Leach, in addition to profits ranging from $90,000 to $173,000 per year, Vitarisi gave himself a $120,000.

"Like anybody, he has good years and he has bad years," Leach said.

According to "conservative" analysis, Pacific Grove could make between $30,000 and $120,000 per year if the city operated the course itself, Colangelo said.

Per his contract, Vitarisi had to give the city at least $80,000 per year. But Leach said he always exceeded that, sometimes paying the city in the low $90,000 range.

The city plans to hire a full-time golf pro for about $120,000 per year and 11 part-time workers who would not be eligible for benefits.

Favoritism refuted

Colangelo said the audit should also clear up rumors some golfers received favors.

"Some people say some [golfers] don't get their punch card punched or they can just go out there with their buddy [without paying]," he said. "It's hard to prove if it's going on, but certainly people are talking about it."

Vitarisi denied any mismanagement and said foolproof systems prevent wrongdoing.

"It's impossible to let somebody through here without getting caught through the system," Vitarisi said. "If somebody goes on the golf course, it says if he pays or not."

In any case, Colangelo said, the analysis will serve as a way to prevent mismanagement when the city begins running the course.

"What it could point to is system improvements," he said.

The audit won't reveal inconsistencies that may have occurred three or more years ago, but it could show more recent ones.

"If there is something improper in the last year or two, it might show something," Colangelo said.

The city council has heard outcry from some angry residents who believe a private concessionaire should run the golf course.

Leach said hopefully the frustration will disappear once the city proves it can run it successfully.

"We are excited," he said. "There will be a little transition, but once it's all done, hopefully everybody will benefit from it."

State park hosts Big Sur multi-agency meeting

PFEIFFER BIG Sur State Park will host the next Big Sur Multi-Agency Advisory Council meeting Friday, June 30. Agenda items include discussions on last spring's bicycle tour and the ongoing battle to remove exotic plants from Big Sur. The Ventana Wilderness Society will offer a report on its condor project, while the Big Sur Vision Group will update locals on its progress.

Co-chaired by 5th District Supervisor Dave Potter and Congressman Sam Farr, the meeting will begin at 10 a.m. in the Big Sur Lodge conference center, which is located inside the state park.

Postcard art means pint-sized prices

By CHRIS COUNTS

ARTISTS, BY nature, tend to resist rules. The creative process is about possibilities, not limitations. So it comes as a bit of a surprise that gallery owner Lisa Coscino — typically a champion of challenging and nonconforming art — is encouraging artists to fit their creative impulses inside a 4 inch by 6 inch box.

The Coscino Gallery hosts “Mail Me,” a new exhibit focusing on postcard-sized artwork. The show, which will open with a reception Friday, June 30, from 6 to 8 p.m., will continue through Sept. 2.

Curiously, being forced to think inside a box can lead to thinking outside the box, Coscino explained. For an artist, conforming to criteria doesn't have to be restrictive. To the contrary, the experience can be liberating.

“When artists have parameters, they can come up with some very interesting results,” she said. “Guidelines can help artists express themselves in ways they haven't considered.”

The postcard theme is a natural fit for a summer exhibit.

“What do you in the summer?” asked Coscino. “You travel. And what do you do when you travel? You send postcards.”

One of the biggest advantages of hosting a show of 4 inch by 6 inch pieces is they don't take up too much space. This allows Coscino the opportunity to do what she does best — display a wide diversity of artists working in a multitude of mediums.

“The show will be very inclusive,” she explained. “We're presenting a number of artists we haven't even seen before.”

Affordability is another advantage to presenting pint-sized art.

Ambitious dance concert to benefit Esalen Institute

By CHRIS COUNTS

THE ESALEN Institute has long been one of the Central Coast's least understood institutions. Now, four decades after its inception, the famous Big Sur workshop center and hot springs retreat is trying to change that.

A year ago, the Pacific Grove Museum of Natural History hosted an informative presentation on Esalen's past, present and future, serving up evidence the onetime epicenter of the “Human Potential” movement is alive and well in the 21st century.

Now, the folks at Esalen want to show there's more to the nonprofit organization than intellectual idealism. Not only can they inspire heady discussions on a dizzying array of mind-bending subjects, but they can dance too.

On Friday, July 7, the Golden State Theatre in Monterey will host “Song Circus,” an ambitious dance production designed to dazzle audiences and raise money for Esalen.

In the spirit of Cirque du Soleil, the performance combines music and dance with circus acrobatics. For 90 minutes, the stage at the Golden State Theatre will be a whirl of “Reducing the size almost always means reducing the price,” Coscino said.

Forty-seven artists will be represented in the show. Prices start as low as $35.

Art center sheds light on photographer

Oliver Gagliani never achieved the recognition of Ansel Adams or even Edward Weston, but his name is well known in the world of fine art photography. An exhibit of Gagliani's often abstract work opens at the Center for Photographic Art Friday, June 30, providing a rare glimpse of the late artist.

“Oliver was one of America's favorite photographers,” explained CPA director Dennis High. “He was not a household name, but he was a major player. Oliver was the consummate technician. He produced some of the finest silver gelatin prints ever made.”

A native of Placerville, Gagliani was long fascinated by the legacy of California's Gold Rush. His maternal grandparents were Forty-Niners, and at an early age, Gagliani began exploring the region's historical sites. He had a particularly strong attraction to old Nevada mining towns such as Virginia City and Bodie, which were the subject of many of his photographs. Gagliani died in 2002.

The gallery, which is located at Sunset Center, is open Tuesdays through Sundays from 1 to 5 p.m. For more information, call color and movement while a soundtrack of hip-hop, r&b, jazz and gospel keeps everybody's hips shaking.

"This is a great show to bring a date to," explained prolific local choreographer Tandy Beal, who serves as the show's director. "And it's a great show to bring a family to. Everybody is going to enjoy it. There's a sense of wonder, a sense of beauty and a sense of joy. And that's what the world needs more of right now."

The event will feature SoVoSo, an Oakland-based vocal ensemble.

"I met them when we were all working together with [singer] Bobby McFerrin," Beal said. "He started a group called 'Voicestra,' and I did the stage direction. SoVoSo grew out of that. They go straight to your heart, and they're matched by some wonderful visual artists in both circus and dance."

Proceeds from the event benefit Esalen's arts and cultural programs, and its preschool and daycare center, the Gazebo Park School. Beal, who lives in Santa Cruz, has taught workshops at Esalen for 10 years.

"They do extraordinary work," Beal said. "They really are a beacon. I want to help support them."

While Esalen is best known for its work in humanistic psychology and bodywork, dance workshops — like those taught by Beal — are becoming a popular draw.

"Modern dance pioneer Gabrielle Roth developed her 'Five Rhythms' at Esalen," explained Gordon Wheeler, Esalen's president. "Dance has a long history here. We're very much committed to diversity, and the arts generate a lot of "Circus Song" is the culminating event of the Esalen International Arts Festival, a series of workshops at Esalen beginning Sunday, July 2.

The event starts at 7:30 p.m. The theater is located at 417 Alvarado St. in Monterey. Tickets are $35 for adults, $20 for seniors and students, and $15 for children under 12. One child gets in free with each paying adult. For tickets, call

From famine back to feast

Eventually a compromise was reached. State parks would buy the property, and the City of Pacific Grove would lease the land and operate the center. On July 1, 1956, Asilomar hosted a dedication ceremony, officially ushering in the center's next era. But by the mid-1960s, it became clear the city didn't have the resources to operate the center. In 1969, the city terminated its lease, and state parks hired a nonprofit group — the Pacific Grove-Asilomar Operating Corporation — to manage the center.

In 1971, all of the property from Asilomar Boulevard to Crocker Avenue, and from Sinex Avenue to Sunset Drive was acquired, increasing the park to 105 acres. In 1987, to honor Morgan's contributions to Asilomar, it was declared a National Historic Landmark. Between 1919 and 1928, Morgan designed 15 buildings on the property.

In 1991, a trail was established along the beach, and two years later, 3 acres were added, increasing the park to 108 acres. In 1997, a new 10-year concession contract was awarded to the Delaware North Companies Parks & Resorts, Inc., which which currently operates Asilomar.

Back to the present

Fifty years after local residents lobbied for the state's purchase of the property, Kaye would like to see more of them at the facility. She said it's great place to visit, even if it's just for a cup of coffee.

"Some people are intimidated by our front gate," said Kaye, who received her initial training as a state parks ranger at Asilomar in 1984. "A lot of local residents have never even been here. But people are always welcome here. It's their state park."

Sandy Claws

By Margot Petit Nichols

JINGER CRISTAL, 10, a lovely Labrador mix recuperating in the foggy embrace of Carmel-by-the-Sea's summer weather, is joyful to be here and out of the heat and humidity of San Antonio, Texas.

Jinger jets back and forth between her two homes, or, on this visit, motored here with her Mom Lyn, Dad Tom and her older brother and sister, Jet and Mush Face, 12-year-old felines who surprisingly love to take car trips.

Jinger, Jet and Mush Face were rescued – Jinger when she was 6 months old, and the cats when they showed up separately at the Cristal doorstep, feral and hungry. It took two years to catch Jet, and two years to tame Mush Face, but Jinger was right at home from the start.

She gained notoriety in San Antonio by climbing trees to chase squirrels, a feat evidently never before accomplished in her hometown. Little girls in the neighborhood loved to see her shinnying up the big oak in the Cristal garden, and to that end, would ring the doorbell asking if Jinger could come out and play.

When we spied Jinger and Mom Lyn on the Carmel Beach walking path, Mom wasn't making a whole lot of progress due to Jinger having to sniff every clump of flowers and bush along the way, seeking out beach squirrels, which she often encounters.

It will come as no surprise to learn that Jinger's oldest and most loved toy is a stuffed squirrel.

Jinger is making splendid progress from her leg surgery, as readers can see from her smile in this photo taken Wednesday morning among the beachside summer flowers that proved to be disappointingly devoid of squirrels.

Tom Sawyer honored at Carmel Beach

A CARMEL man who was a friend to dozens of dogs is to be honored with a celebration of his life at Carmel Beach.

Tom Sawyer, who died at age 79 in January, made it a daily labor of love for many years to drive to Scenic Road just south of Santa Lucia to give treats to the many dogs who passed his pickup on their morning walks. On seeing is truck, dogs would run toward it in anticipation.

The public and dogs are invited to a ceremony beginning at 5 p.m. Friday, June 30, on the beach below Scenic and Santa Lucia. Renati Mannan is organizing the tribute to Sawyer, who would have been 80 this month.

Decadent dinner marks Talbott's two decades in Chardonnay

By CHARYN PFEUFFER

AN EXQUISITE evening at David Fink's Bouchée restaurant in Carmel celebrated the release of Talbott Vineyards' 2003 Sleepy Hollow Vineyard Chardonnay, marking the 20th anniversary of the release of Robb Talbott's first Chardonnay. When he started Robert Talbott Vineyards, he had "no label, no cork, no bottle and no marketing plan — just an idea," Talbott says.

He'd been bitten by the Burgundian wine bug. "Once you try wine from Burgundy, you never get over that," he says. "I wasn't going to make anything else."

In 1982, Talbott got a tractor, cleared the brush from his 24-acre hillside Carmel Valley property, sold the cattle (and ate a few), and the now famous Diamond T Ranch — named after a truck Talbott restored in his pre-winery days — became a reality. The vines planted in its shale and granite set the standard for Talbott's distinct winemaking style.

The evening's festivities, however, were to celebrate the award-winning Chardonnay produced from the Sleepy Hollow Vineyard, which Talbott bought in 1994. The hilly vineyard sits along the western edge of the Salinas Valley in the Santa Lucia Highlands appellation.

During the growing season, warm midday sunshine is followed by late-afternoon cool breezes and fog off the Monterey Bay. This makes for a long, cool growing season, which allows the Pinot Noir, Chardonnay and Syrah to fully develop.

Vineyard manager and winemaker Sam Balderas keeps yields low to increase concentration, and he minimizes the handling of the wine to preserve the fruit's natural essence. Talbott Chardonnays are rich and full-bodied, possessing an oaky, buttery flavor that comes from aging in new French barrels. Talbott's Sleepy Hollow Vineyard Chardonnays have been produced from the same 33 acres since 1985. Quick note to the wine geeks: The November 1997 issue of "Wine Spectator" scored the 1990 Robert Talbott Sleepy Hollow Vineyard Chardonnay a perfect 100 points.

It was slightly more than two decades ago that Talbott showed up at the Highlands Inn with a bottle of his 1983 Chardonnay and patiently waited 45 minutes to speak with then-food and beverage manager David Fink. Fink became Talbott's very first customer.

"It was an honor beyond measure," recalls Talbott. Having the Highlands Inn as a customer was an invaluable step in his wines finding their way to local wine lists and retail shelves.

Today, Talbott Vineyards produces nine highly rated (and widely available) wines and holds more than 700 acres — almost half planted with Chardonnay. In a modern, 28,000-square-foot facility in Gonzales, they employ traditional, hands-on winemaking techniques that typify the Talbott style. Talbott Vineyards is now an entirely estate grown winery.

Vineyard Chardonnay and 2003 Talbott Cuvée Cynthia Chardonnay. (Fink said in a blind taste test of Art Seavey's Monterey Abalone Company farmed abalone and some fresh brought in from a fisherman, there was virtually no difference.)

"The '03 is the best Sleepy Hollow Vineyard I've tasted," says Fink. "It's scary how good it is right now."

Second Course — Sautéed turbot fillet (flown in that morning) with Oregon chanterelles, bacon and English peas from Swank Farms paired with 2002 Talbott Diamond T Estate Chardonnay and 2002 Talbott Cuvée Audrey Chardonnay.

"I've learned from our chefs that any food pairing with Chardonnay must be finished with brown butter," comments Fink.

Main Course — Millbrook venison loin with cherries, lentils and Madeira-venison jus paired with 1999 Talbott Sleepy Hollow Vineyard Case Pinot Noir and 2002 Talbott Sleepy Hollow Vineyard Case Pinot Noir. There is a five-year waiting list to get meat from Millbrook Farms, and Chef Manzke brought his coveted connection from his days at Patina in Los Angeles.

Cheese — Three delicious artisan cheeses with homemade walnut-raisin bread paired with the same Pinot Noirs.

Later this summer, Fink is giving us another reason to celebrate — a new restaurant in Carmel-by-the-Sea, Cantinetta Luca. Named after the popular lunch spot owned by the Marchese Piero Antinori winemaking family in Florence, Italy, and Fink's son, Luca, this latest addition to his successful restaurant lineup is headed by Fink, chef/partner Walter Manzke and Executive Chef Jason Balestrieri. Cantinetta Luca will serve Cal-Italian cuisine with an emphasis on local ingredients and house-made bread, pizza, pasta and salumi. Stay tuned.

Homeowners win some, lose some at historic review board

By MARY BROWNFIELD

WITH a stack of appeals awaiting decisions, the Carmel Historic Resources Board worked overtime this month to decide the fates of homes selected by the city for mandatory preservation. At meetings June 19 and June 26, members granted four appeals, denied three and delayed three, including one focusing on a home supposedly constructed and occupied by prolific Peninsula artist Jo Mora.

Since last summer, when the city announced 300 buildings would be put on its inventory of historic properties, about one-third of the owners filed appeals. While historic designation prevents major alterations or demolition of old buildings, it can also afford benefits in fee discounts and tax breaks, as well as code flexibility for remodels that meet federal standards. So far, the HRB has granted 15 appeals and denied 14 — though two were overturned by the city council early this month. Seven were withdrawn by the owners.

The Mora mystery

Any house built and inhabited by Carmel artist Jo Mora, best known for sculpting the cenotaph of Father Junipero Serra in the Carmel Mission, would almost certainly be declared historic, but Renati Mannan questions whether Mora had any real association with her 85-year-old, two-story, Craftsman-style San Carlos Street house. The shiplap-sided home underwent substantial changes, including losing half the length of the single-story portion in a 1965 lot line adjustment, and the construction and subsequent enclosure of a deck in 1965 and 1981.

Consultant Kent Seavey concluded Mannan's house is the only residence Mora ever built, and that he lived in it from 1921 to 1923.

"I know he applied for the permit and paid $4,000 in 1921 for lots one, three, five and seven," Mannan said, but she could not find building plans or early photos of the house. And a Monterey History and Art Association booklet on Mora shows a photograph of the house he reportedly built, but it looks nothing like Mannan's.

She said she plans to ask Mora's 93-year-old son, who lives in Pebble Beach, about it, and board members decided to delay a decision. They also recommended contacting Julianne Burton-Carvajal, the author of the MHAA piece.

"We want to be very careful of what we're doing," chair Julie Wendt said. "If this is the only contribution we have as an example of his residential design, that weighs substantially in favor of preserving it if we can tie up those loose ends."

The board put off another appeal after a 2-2 vote, with member Paul Coss absent, regarding Donald and Elizabeth Mathews' 84-year-old stucco house on Santa Rita Street. Seavey concluded it should be preserved because its resident was stonemason Ben Figueroa, a member of a group of Portuguese families who lived in an area known as Tortilla Flats in the northeast corner of town.

Seavey said Figueroa's stone chimney and wall constitute "the architectural value in the building."

Assistant planner Nathan Schmidt said neither Figueroa nor Tortilla Flats are identified in city documents as important, and the house has no "significant architectural style."

Members Erik Dyar and Erling Lagerholm did not believe the home should be on the list, but Wendt and board member Kay Holz voted to keep it, as city documents might be updated to include references to Tortilla Flats and master stonemasons.

The board also delayed considering a third application at the request of the property owner, who could not attend the June 26 meeting.

Off the list

Board members voted to remove four structures from the city's historic inventory:

■ Tony and Judy Tollner's modern-style house at Santa Rita and Sixth was built in 1950 and received several undated additions and alterations. Seavey said it should be preserved because engineer and land use planner George Bestor lived there. But associate planner Sean Conroy said Bestor did not influence the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea, since his subdivisions were in Carmel Valley, unincorporated Carmel and Monterey. The June 26 vote to remove it was unanimous.

■ The board deliberated on Jeff and Jennifer Svihus' 81-year-old Junipero Street house but delayed making a decision so it could obtain more information about its earlier occupants. On June 19, they learned the Craftsman-style home has been significantly altered and cannot be connected with people who contributed significantly to Carmel. The writers who once lived there — John and Ethel Turner — were not living there when their careers peaked.

■ A "three-story vernacular structure with Craftsman elements," at Lincoln and 13th, "is a good example of the eclectic building practices in Carmel and contributes to the character of the neighborhood and the city," according to Conroy. But builder Gustave Laumeister is not historically important and the home sustained too many changes, he said, so it should be removed from the inventory. Preservation activist Enid Sales said she believes it's significant but could not find a lot of information. The board voted 2-1 to grant the appeal June 19, with Dyar dissenting and Holz recusing herself.

■ An L-shaped, Ranch-style home constructed on Santa Lucia in 1948 is not a great example of that architectural style, Conroy stated in his staff report June 19. While Seavey said contractor Carl Bensberg designed and built the house, Conroy did not find any evidence he designed it. Conroy said the city has not identified Bensberg as a master builder. Though Wendt favored keeping owner Belinda Ray's house on the inventory, the other three board members voted against it.

A century old

The HRB also denied three appeals:

■ Sydney and Louis Roussel's Spanish Colonial Revival-style house designed by Frederick Bigland was built on Carmelo Street in 1928, according to Conroy. The owners made no specific arguments for delisting it, instead objecting to a possible decline in property value and an increase in government regulation. Conroy said the house is a good example of the style, was created by an influential designer and has maintained a high degree of architectural integrity. On June 26, the board unanimously agreed.

■ Despite some additions and alterations, the 100-year-old Craftsman-style bungalow belonging to Carl Cox is the only remaining example of designer Artie Shaw's work, Schmidt reported. Cox argued the house is not distinctive or unique and was compromised by alterations, but board members said the most drastic — a carport at the front — could easily be removed. They voted 3-1 June 26, with Lagerholm dissenting, to keep it.

■ The previous week, Bill Doolittle argued his Minimal Traditional-style house on Casanova Street, built in 1939, is unremarkable and should not be considered historic. Schmidt agreed, but the board voted 3-1 to retain it, citing Seavey's conclusion the house is "a good unaltered example of a type of residential design found in Carmel in the immediate pre-World War II period."

viewed the candidates and recommended Anda/Burghardt.

Councilman Mike Cunningham wondered how Anda/Burghardt could stretch the city's tax dollars and what impact the effort would have on filling hotel rooms.

"The limitation we have with the financial resources at our disposal puts a significant strain on what we can do," Cunningham said.

Burghardt did not want to predict how a change in marketing strategy might boost occupancy but promised, "Our agency will get you more out of your $100,000 than anybody else." Avoiding broadcast TV, and mailing postcards rather than multipage pieces, would save money.

"Our account of what you're spending is going to be very, very clear," he said.

Chamber member Michael Adamson said the firm's presentation impressed him, and Tod Strain of Carmel Plaza found its "fresh eyes" approach ideal.

Councilman Gerard Rose thanked the committee for its guidance and moved approval of the contract. Councilman Mike Cunningham wanted to put off a decision until after budget discussions scheduled later in the meeting, but he ultimately supported the agreement when the rest of the council declined to delay.

Hilary Teague Kitch

She much quickens our spirits, and makes our hearts lightsome. On May 24, 2006, Hilary Teague Kitch lost her battle against pulmonary fibrosis. Hilary worked in the administrative office of the San Francisco Waldorf School for seventeen years, the last several as office manager. Everyone, adult and child, called her "Hilary." She was their friend and helper. She was much loved.

She was born in Los Angeles, California on Christmas Day 1941. Hilary and her sister Linda were the daughters of Donald and Verna Teague, late of Carmel, California. Donald Teague was an illustrator and painter whose early work appeared in Collier's, The Saturday Evening Post, The American Mercury and other popular magazines of the 1920's through the 1940's. At the end of the era of classic magazine illustration, he converted to fine art, was elected to the National Academy, and proceeded to launch a new career which took him and his family on frequent trips to various locations worldwide. Hilary and Linda benefitted from this early travel experience and were always avid travelers thereafter. Hilary grew up in Carmel, and graduated from Carmel High, a classmate of congressman Sam Farr. She graduated in art history from George Washington University in Washington, D.C., where she shared lodgings in Georgetown with her Carmel friend Polly Gann. After a year in St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, Hilary applied to and was hired by the worldwide charter airline Trans International, later acquired by TransAmerica and renamed TransAmerica Airlines. She flew as a senior flight attendant and later as a flight attendant supervisor, all on international routes. She worked European and occasionally African routes; she danced at carnival in Rio. She saw the gray foxes along the runway in Thule, Greenland, and worked many Military Air Transport flights into and out of Viet Nam in an airlines career that spanned fourteen years.

During this time she indulged in her other passion, the theatre, and played many starring comedienne roles in productions at the Studio Theatre in Carmel, where she was locally famous. Many Carmelites may still remember her in The Boyfriend, Bye Bye Birdie and Barefoot in the Park. In 1974 She married Ken Kitch, former Managing Director of the San Francisco Actor's Workshop, who had returned after two seasons as Associate Director at Arena Stage in Washington, D.C. Then, at age 40, Hilary said you know...something is missing.

Their son Bryan was born in 1982, after which Hilary joined the Waldorf School community where she spent seventeen of the happiest years of her life. She loved to go to work. Her son was in the school. She loved sports, was an avid Giants fan, and got on famously with Bryan, watching him play basketball and baseball, then at UCLA where he became captain of the varsity crew (rowing) and competed at the PAC 10 championships, later winning a national championship in the heavyweight eights for the New York Athletic Club. He graduated from UCLA summa cum laude, Phi Beta Kappa. He seems to have inherited some of his famous Grandfather's artistic talent. His pen and ink sketch of Hilary accompanies this memorial. He turned out well. All who knew Hilary in her various careers took away in their hearts the image of her smiling, helpful face. Her tact and discretion. Her coolness under fire. Her grace. Her quiet elegance.

Memorial services were held in San Francisco on May 31, followed by a reception at Waldorf School. A private funeral is planned. She is survived by her Sister, Linda Biro and family of Los Angeles, her husband Ken of San Francisco, and her son Bryan, also of Los Angeles. The family prefers memorial gifts to the San Francisco Waldorf School, 2938 Washington Street, San Francisco, CA 94115.

mer city council member David Maradei, who was postmaster at the time, suggested the cartoonist cheer up the lobby.

"It was Christmas, and there was a long line of grumpy people waiting to get their packages mailed," Bates recalled. "And David said, 'There's no one smiling, Bill.'"

So Bates shelled out $2,000 to have some of the cartoons he created in the 1970s framed and displayed to entertain postal patrons. His favorite was the Volkswagen Bug stopped at a busy Ocean Avenue crosswalk full of camera-toting, gawking tourists. The skeletal arm of a driver who's been waiting too long hangs out the open window.

Longtime residents took their out-of-town visitors to the post office, and when friends asked Bates to share his work, he would lead them there.

"I heard one man say, 'I don't need to see Carmel. I've already walked through the post office,'" the artist said.

Liability a worry?

Postal service spokesman Gus Ruiz, who represents the Bay Valley District and works in San Jose, said the privately run postal service simply wants its retail lobbies to look uniform and professional. According to the rules, they should only feature USPS products and services for sale.

"We realize in a lot of communities there is a lot of pride around certain artworks and artifacts," he said, so the higher-ups told acting postmaster Carlos Santiago he could place some of the cartoons in the mailbox lobby.

"I suppose it's better than nothing, but that would be seen more by the residents than the visitors who are in mailing their post cards," McCloud said. "And the main working area is where people stand in line for 15 minutes. It's something to relieve your boredom."

But Bates worried the lighting would be poor and people could steal the prints, since the box lobby remains open even when the service area is closed.

"We're going to have to discuss that with the postmaster on the security issue," Ruiz said. "Because we don't want to be held liable if it's someone else's property."

He also doubted community notices, lost-pet fliers, theater notices and other messages could be hung on box lobby bulletin boards, as they had before the team surveyed the post office earlier this month.

Because almost all Carmel residents don't have home mail delivery, the post office functions as the town square, where friends meet and vital civic information is exchanged. Still, the bulletin boards were stripped of all notices, and last week the box lobby received its first new coat of paint in 40 years.

Ruiz said Santiago would also determine whether the City of Carmel and other public agencies can continue posting meeting agendas and notices.

"According to our post office manual in terms of what's permitted in the interior, including the box lobby as well as the retail area, there are restrictions in terms of what can be posted," he said. "The postmaster has that information and will be making that interpretation. He has to make sure it conforms to whatever that regulation requires."

If they are not displayed in the post office, Bates said he might find another publicly accessible permanent location for his cartoons or auction them off.

"I'm keeping my options open," he said.

Thief uses stolen charge card for bubbly

THE SHOPPER who appeared to be flush was in fact using someone else's money to ship pricey bottles of Dom Perignon from Nielsen Bros. Market to New York, according to Carmel Police Sgt. Mel Mukai. The first pair were sent at a cost of $370 before the business learned the order, and others, were fraudulent. "It was called in on Friday, and the items were delivered on Monday morning," Mukai said. "And I believe that same Monday was when one of the responsible authorized users called in and said, 'What's this charge?'" The same Champagne-craving suspect placed subsequent orders using different credit card numbers, but Niensens put the kibosh on those before the damage in Dom Perignon was done, according to Mukai.

HISTORIC

Councilman Gerard Rose quickly moved to grant the appeal, but councilman Mike Cunningham wanted to discuss what constitutes loss of integrity.

"I don't know if anybody really knows the answer to that question, but it's the one we have to grapple with," he said. "As a council, we need to try to crisp up what that really means."

Mayor Sue McCloud said the broader topic was not on the agenda, though Cunningham said deciding on the Moscows' appeal would set a precedent.

McCloud pointed out the inventory includes almost three dozen similar houses, many more intact than the Moscows'.

Rose said Seavey's assessment of the home's historicity "seems to be so broad and so winsome as to be unfathomable — it could include the portable john at the end of Scenic as much as a Comstock."

Councilwoman Paula Hazdovac recalled seeing the construction in 1999 and thinking the home was being newly built.

"The historic value of the house has been marred, because so much of the exterior has been changed," she said.

The council unanimously voted to overturn the HRB's decision and grant the Moscows' appeal.

Council members were prepared to consider two other appeals, but Eldana Eggleston withdrew her challenge to the historic resources board's refusal to take her Camino Real house off the list, and attorney Anthony Lombardo requested a delay for a similar hearing on the Doris M. Rayne Trust's Ocean Avenue building.

Editorial

Stop the world!

WE HAVEN'T usually agreed with local doomsayers who see almost every touch of modernity introduced to the town as a regrettable "loss of character."

Take historic buildings. Sure, there are a few in town that warrant mandatory protection by the government. But there are also lots of old buildings in Carmel that deserve nothing better than to be torn down.

Similarly, quite a few of the new ones that have gone up in recent years are elegant and tasteful and should be considered objects of civic pride — and will surely be called "historic" by the next generation of preservationists.

Where buildings are concerned, even in a quaint town such as Carmel, there is no reason to fear the future. When it comes to stucco, woodwork and landscaping, people who are alive today have as much to contribute as their forbears did.

But elsewhere in town, some "improvements" go too far and should be vigorously opposed. We definitely draw the line when it comes to "modernizing" the Carmel post office by turning it into a cold, sanitized, could-be-anywhere place with all the charm of an IRS waiting room.

For years, postal officials have refused to allow distribution of The Pine Cone inside the downtown post office. Even though this newspaper certainly qualifies as a Carmel institution, it was understandable they didn't want us handing out copies there. If they let us in, they would have to let everybody in.

But The Pine Cone's cartoonist, Bill Bates, is unique. He has no competitor on the local media scene. Therefore, displaying his cartoons in the post office service area invited no avalanche of like-minded cartoonists demanding equal time.

But that's not the best reason for keeping them on display, as they have been for more than 20 years.

For customers, waiting as they do in the seemingly interminable lines to buy stamps, mail packages and catch up on the local gossip, Bates' unforgettable images of life in Carmel-by-the-Sea were a precious distraction.

And for tourists, the drawings were a primer in the virtues of life in California's most charming coastal village. Where else could you be introduced to a woman demanding firefighters save her trees before they saved her home?

But now Bates' collection of cartoons are gone. Postal bureaucrats took them down last week in the name of "standardization."

If that's supposed to be a good thing, may Earth leave its orbit.

Seeking answers

Dear Editor,

OK, let me get this straight. Our community is under a state ordered water shortage because we take too much from the Carmel River. There has not been a drop of water for people who own legal lots of record to build something useful on their properties for more than a decade. Now, your fine reporter, Kelly Nix, tells us in the June 23 Pine Cone that a desalination pilot plant is projected to begin producing 90,000 gallons of clean, fresh water every day, starting in October. That's 2.7 millions per month. Wonderful!

Now here is the part of Nix's story that is too deep for my poor brain to fathom: The 90,000 gallons of potable water produced daily "will be tested for water quality before being RETURNED TO THE OCEAN."

Perhaps somebody from the water district, the coastal commission, the Sierra Club — or the brilliant David Dilworth — can explain why all that valuable water should be wasted.

Marilyn Flynn, Pacific Grove

What quality water?

Dear Editor

Kelly Nix's June 23 article on the arrival of Cal Am's pilot desal plant prompts me to ask what quality of water Cal Am intends to produce during its pilot study. The technology is capable of producing any quality of water the community wants and is willing to pay for. To date, I am unaware of any efforts by either Cal Am or Pajaro/Sunny Mesa to discern what quality of water the community wants.

Water quality governs plant design, operation and economics. Quality assumptions have assuredly been made on the part of the producers prior to construction of their pilot plants. These assumptions have not received the benefit of public input. Public input on the quality of water intended to be delivered to the community should also be part of the piloting process. The community will benefit from a process which catalogs its water quality requirements. Cal Am should begin this consultation.

Bob Siegfried, Carmel

desalination pilot facility operated by the Pajaro/Sunny Mesa Community Services District has included meaningful community involvement. The assertion by Surfrider in the story that Monterey County conducted no public hearings prior to issuing the administrative Coastal Development Permit is simply not accurate. In fact, on Feb. 6, 2006, the North County Land Use Advisory Committee held a properly noticed public hearing that resulted in a recommendation to the county zoning administrator to allow Pajaro/Sunny Mesa to install, and operate for up to three years, a temporary desalination test facility in Moss Landing.

Pajaro/Sunny Mesa and its private sector partner, Poseidon Resources, are committed to a positive solution to the region's water needs. We are finalizing the permitting with the state agencies and expect to have the pilot plant operating in the coming months. In the meantime, we will continue to engage the water community and the public throughout what we anticipate to be an inclusive and comprehensive decision making process.

What about our homeless dogs?

Dear Editor:

I weep over the sad plight of Anamarie, the partially paralyzed and incontinent refugee from the mean streets of Galatsi, Rumania, who now seeks a home in Carmel.

There is no doubt, as Nancy Janes states, that the situation is desperate in Rumania. For many years now, the international community calls Rumania a "dog killer state." According to Isabela Alexandrescu, Aniwa.com's correspondent in Bucharest, "killings continue in the shelters, without anesthesia, or directly in the street, with poisoned meat thrown out of cars. In the morning, when people go to work or children to school, they are horrified to see numerous dogs agonizing and screaming with pain, lying on the pavement. The Rumanian media is mute." (Aniwa.com, Jan. 9, 2002.)

But whose hands are free of stain? I am reminded of the scores of unwanted canines who are being euthanized in shelters on the Monterey Peninsula even as I write this letter. Are they less worthy than Rumanian refugees?

Let Ms. Janes keep Anamarie on her ranch in the foothills of Mt. Diablo. Let her teach her seven other dogs to behave. Let her train her three horses to watch where they step. Anamarie is sure to thrive on a ranch. In brief, please do not add to Carmel's already intolerable burden of guilt.

I know whereof I speak. My own mother was euthanized. (See Chapter 2 of my autobiography, "Dingus Dreaming," written with the assistance of my amanuensis, Alex Vardamis. The book is available in Carmel at Pilgrim's Way Bookstore and the Garden Shop and Surf and Sand). I hope this does not sound harsh, but I'm afraid that charity should begin at home. If, kind Carmelites, you want a pet, please remember the languishing dogs (and even cats, if you prefer) at the Monterey County SPCA.

Dingus, a Carmel mongrel, rescued from the Monterey County SPCA

Museum may close?

Dear Editor,

Paul Finnegan, curator of the Pacific Grove Museum of Natural History, has announced that due to budget problems faced by the city, the museum may be on the chopping block.

The loss of this 125-year-old museum, older than the city itself, would be a tragedy.

It provides an opportunity for residents and visitors alike to see specimens of local wildlife and birds — including a soon-to-be-shown California Condor. It has a display of early Native American life. Probably nowhere locally, outside of the Monterey Bay Aquarium, attracts more busloads of school kids than the museum.

These children have the opportunity to learn about, appreciate and ultimately work to protect our natural resources at an age when they are also influenced by less worthy agendas. The exhibition gallery has changing art, photography and other meaningful displays to stimulate interest in nature. A variety of evening and weekend programs attract people of all ages.

The P.G. museum also hosts docents at the lighthouse and the monarch butterfly sanctuary.

And each spring the museum hosts one of the largest wildflower shows anywhere in the entire United States, put on by the California Native Plant Society. Crowds of people come in for three days to view and study displays with hundreds of native Monterey County plants — many of which most visitors have never seen before — as well as many common non-native weeds that invade our gardens and wildlands.

Outside the building is a garden of plants native to Monterey County with lovely flowering wild iris, bulbs, and other wildflowers and shrubs not found in most gardens. Without the continuing care of someone knowledgeable about native plants, this garden would soon become a weed patch. The museum is part of Pacific Grove's heritage, its heart and soul. Its loss would be everyone's loss.
