French bulldog dies after eating toxic mushrooms

By KELLY NIX

THE OWNERS of a French bulldog puppy who died last week after eating infamous death cap mushrooms in the front yard of their Carmel Woods home are warning other pet owners to watch out for the toxic fungus.

Georgie, who was only 4-and-a-half months old, died less than 24 hours after ingesting amanita phalloides, mushrooms commonly known as death caps. Death caps often grow near Georgie "was a shining light in our family and the sweetest little gentleman," Georgie's owner, Robin Bates, told The Pine Cone. "We are left shocked and heartbroken. He enjoyed saying, 'Hello,' to just about everyone walking on Carmel Beach the past two months."

Schmitz resigns, Calhoun steps in as temp head of city

By MARY SCHLEY

CITING JOB- and family-related stress, city administrator Doug Schmitz abruptly resigned on Halloween, which was also the City of Carmel's 99th birthday.

"I'd already been discussing with the mayor and vice mayor about retiring sometime in the first half of 2016, and after visiting with my physician last week, we decided to move the timetable up," Schmitz told The Pine Cone this week.

Council draws line in sand over beach fires

■ Declares them a 'public nuisance'

By MARY SCHLEY

AFTER MORE than four hours of comments and discussion — including nearly an hour's worth of testimony from air pollution control board manager Richard Stedman on the ills of wood smoke — the Carmel City Council on Tuesday voted 3-2 that only propane fires should be allowed on the beach.

By the same tally, it adopted a broad ordinance describing beach fires as a public nuisance — a designation that will give the city more muscle in its fight with the California Coastal Commission, which doesn't want fires banned.

Council members Carrie Theis and Steve Dallas dissented both times.

The ban is a significant change of direction for the council, which had earlier decided to limit fires to 26 rings, and then to ban them on weekends.

The dividing line fell between the majority, which has come to believe any number of beach fires is too many, since the smoke they emit could be considered poisonous for some, and the minority, which wanted more data on the dangers and amounts of wood smoke before endorsing a ban.

The Nov. 3 hearing drew a standing-room-only crowd,

See FIRES page 15A

At a special meeting Nov. 2, the city council voted to accept Schmitz' resignation, which he tendered in a letter to Mayor Jason Burnett, and to appoint Carmel Police Chief Mike Calhoun as interim city administrator until the council hires a permanent replacement for Schmitz.

Burnett remarked that Schmitz had stepped down from his job as city manager of Los Altos in 2012 and was happily retired when the mayor called him 14 months ago to ask him to help lead the city in the wake of the upheaval created by former city administrator Jason Stilwell and administrative services director Sue Paul. During their tenure, several long-time employees were fired, expensive contracts were signed in secret, and other actions undermined many residents' and business owners' trust of city hall.

Schmitz, who had been city administrator here from 1983 to 1992, agreed to help, arriving in October 2013, just as Stilwell departed.

"And every day that we had him here was a blessing for the community and for me, certainly, and the organization is in so much better shape than it was 13 months ago," Burnett told The Pine Cone. "It is night and day, and thankfully, he was able to help as much as he was."

While on the job, Schmitz instigated new policies and procedures to make the city's financial dealings more transparent, moved key department directors into positions that better tapped into their talents and abilities, and rehired the three city workers whom Stilwell and Paul had fired. He also resumed the annual shoreline assessment that had gone undone for decades and took other measures to continue

GUV'S DECLARATION CLEARS WAY FOR TREE REMOVAL

By CHRIS COUNTS

AFTER GOV. Jerry Brown last week declared a state of emergency over the fire risk posed by California's massive number of dead or dying trees, a Carmel Highlands resident says the proclamation should make it easier for him and his

Water board outlook unchanged by election

■ Evans wins seat held by Markey

By KELLY NIX

AN ENGINEER who has the support of a longtime water activist and a county supervisor has won a seat on the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District board over a stockbroker whose endorsements included realtor and hospitality groups, former mayors and others.

On Tuesday, voters in water district Division 3, an area that includes Del Rey Oaks and part of Monterey, cast 762 votes for Molly Evans and 641 votes for Jeff Gorman. The two competed for a seat held for a dozen years by Kristi Markey, who did not seek reelection.

While both candidates said they supported a permanent and sustainable water supply for the Monterey Peninsula, they had distinctly different supporters.

neighbors to clear such trees from their properties.

"We've got thousands and thousands of trees that need to be removed," Dan Keig told The Pine Cone. "You can see dead trees all over. We have a really big problem."

To speed up the work of removing dead or dying trees, Keig would like to see the permit process streamlined for property owners. Instead of obtaining a tree-removal permit from the county, he would like to see that oversight transferred to the county's fire marshal. "We need a permissive attitude and not a restrictive attitude to deal with this," he suggested.

The Carmel Highlands is just one of many communities throughout the state that are filled with trees killed by drought and disease. In the proclamation, Brown cites statistics indicating that millions of trees throughout the state are dead — and many more will be soon.

"This tree die-off is unprecedented in modern history," Brown declared. "It worsens the wildfire risk across large regions of the state."

Increased fire risk isn't the only problem caused by dead and dying trees. Brown said "rural, forested communities" also face "safety risks from falling trees" and "the threat of erosion."

To address the problem, Brown said state and local agencies need to "to protect the public health and safety," and "remove dead or dying trees in these high hazard zones that threaten power lines, roads, critical community infrastructure and other existing structures."

The proclamation also calls for expanding the practice of controlled burns, and directs two state agencies to "work

For the Love of Labs

Plenty of people build their sense of home around the sincere, sensitive love in the soft eyes of a Labrador retriever. Something about the joyful exuberance of a Lab puppy or the warm, gentle wisdom of an older Lab, makes everyone in the house feel a little less human and a little more ... dog.

And if one Lab lifts the spirit in the home, two must put it over the top. At least that's what Gracie and Lily's family feels. They got Gracie first, a black Lab, now 8, who is sweet and calm, and craves quiet attention. Four years later they brought home Lily, a yellow Lab with a white coat, now 4, who is always raring to go.

"Gracie was a delightful puppy and is a wonderful dog," her person says. "She is an old soul, and you cannot over-pet her. I'd always wanted two at the same time, so we finally brought home Lily, who is more of a rascal. She always wants to be doing something."

Whenever Gracie and Lily ride in the car, each hangs her head out the opposite window. As soon as they get to the top of Carmel Hill, they smell that sea air and assume they're going to the beach. Lily starts barking, as if she's about to jump out of her skin, her person says, let alone the car. Gracie watches and waits.

Lily is a great swimmer and loves it," her person says. "She's absolutely fearless, and nothing stops her in the water. Gracie is a high wader but doesn't like to swim. She's always a little more laid back. When we're on the beach and I throw the ball, both dogs run, but Gracie hangs back, as if to say, 'I'll let the little white dog do all the work.'"

Deadlocked council puts off decision on Carmel Sands Lodge

By MARY SCHLEY

FOLLOWING SEVERAL attempts to come to a decision in the early morning hours Wednesday at the end of a marathon Carmel City Council meeting, council members decided to put off their vote on Mark and Susan Stilwell's plans to demolish and rebuild the Carmel Sands Lodge at San Carlos and Fifth.

Mark Stilwell and architect Eric Miller brought the plans to the council after the planning commission decided last month not to reissue permits which were approved in 2010 after two years of debate and appeals. The Stilwells bought the hotel out of foreclosure in 2013.

When they applied for the reissuance, senior planner Marc Wiener recommended the planning commission agree, since the plans had already been thoroughly vetted, and no city laws had changed to make them non-compliant. But commissioners instead wanted the hotel designed in a style that didn't seem to mimic historical buildings. They also took issue with some of the setbacks.

So Stilwell took his case to the city council, where Wiener again recommended the permits be reissued for the Mediterranean-style, stucco, 42-room, four-building complex with retail space, a restaurant, underground parking, a day spa, and an inter-block walkway and interior courtyard.

The Nov. 3 hearing also meant another bite at the apple for people who have always opposed the project — people such as nearby commercial property owner Catherine Compagno.

"Now you have a great opportunity to make the Sands hotel a showpiece — a beautiful A-1, first class hotel worthy of our town," she told the council.

But Stilwell said he thought the hotel would be worthy of Architectural Digest the way the city council already approved it.

"I think this is a showpiece. It's not just designed functionally, but it's beautiful," he said. He also noted that between the city council and planning commission during the first go-round, there was only one dissenting vote out of 10.

"I don't see anything that's changed, other than the makeup of the council," he said.

But councilwoman Victoria Beach's dislike of the plans was evident, even though she voted in favor of them when she was on the planning commission five years ago.

"This project is not beloved. Nobody in the community feels that it contributes to the character and identity of Carmel-by-the-Sea," said Beach, who also described it as "theme-park" and "strip-mally."

She and councilman Steve Dallas wanted to send the permit back to the planning commission. In addition to the appearance of the façade, Beach wanted Stilwell to consider greater setbacks from the street for the buildings, and Dallas wanted him to erect story poles again and provide new drawings.

Councilman Ken Talmage and Mayor Jason Burnett wanted to reissue the permits, including the conditions requiring the Stilwells to take their final plans for the hotel's appearance back to the planning commission for approval.

Burnett noted that if it hadn't been for the Great Recession a few years ago, the project would already be completed.

"We as a village made the decision that this was the right thing at this location, and but for the economic challenges, this would already be built," he said. "Our job is to interpret the guiding documents, but it's not our job to insert our personal preferences."

He also said replacing the outdated Carmel Sands with a new inn would be good

New Routines Are Key to Optimizing Your Workout.

by Team In-Shape, Advertorial

DEAR IN-SHAPE: I go to my health club often, but I am starting to become tired of my routine. I usually do the same exercises and use the same equipment each time. Do you have any suggestions on a new exercise or piece of equipment I can add to my routine to shake things up?

-JONATHAN, 36, CARMEL

DEAR JONATHAN: Great job going into your health club often! Not only are you bored with your usual routine, but so is your body. If you do the same routine each time, your body will get too used to the exercise, and it will no longer challenge you. You could work on the same routine for months, and not see any results!

Adding a new piece of equipment often will change up your routine, and keep your body challenged. We suggest adding a BOSU® ball, which you can find in all of our health clubs. BOSU® balls create instability and forces you to keep your body controlled. It takes simple, quick exercises and makes them a little more challenging. It's a great piece of equipment to help build core strength, endurance, agility and stability.

Start out using it with squats and pushups. As it gets easier for you, try more complex moves such as mountain climbers and lateral shuffles. There are many exercises you can do with a BOSU® ball; if you want to learn more a personal trainer at In-Shape: Carmel would be happy to show you more!

DEAR IN-SHAPE: Lately I've been paying more attention to my body fat percentage. I am new to fitness, so I don't understand what the difference is between fat and muscle. I know fat is bigger than muscle, but are there any other differences?

-SUZIE, 42, PACIFIC GROVE

DEAR SUZIE: You are right, a pound of fat is a lot bigger and takes up more space than a pound of muscle. Muscle is much denser than fat, it takes up four-fifths as much space as fat does. Although someone is the same height and weight, depending on their body fat percentage, one will appear larger. Fat is a lot more lumpy and bulky, whereas muscle is smooth and shapely.

Muscle helps you burn more calories in your workout. One pound of muscle can burn up to 70 calories a day, whereas fat burns up to 7 calories a day. Muscle even helps burn calories when your body is at rest. The best way to maximize muscle gain is to incorporate resistance training into your workout, such as body weight training (when you use your own body weight as resistance).

As long as you are going above and beyond what you normally do, you will see your body fat percentage go down. Always continue to challenge yourself and gain healthy muscle. If you would like to learn more about how to incorporate resistance training into your fitness, a personal trainer at In-Shape: Pacific Grove would be happy to help you!

Fewer illegal short-term rentals in Pacific Grove than thought

By KELLY NIX

PACIFIC GROVE officials — who have grappled with how to deal with an increasing number of short-term rentals in the city— have discovered that the number of illegal rentals is far fewer than they originally estimated, according to the city's economic development director.

Mark Brodeur told The Pine Cone Monday that the city is in the process of determining precisely how many homeowners are in violation of a city ordinance that requires they register their homes, and pay a 10 percent tax on the rental income and a $200 annual fee. But, he said, preliminary data indicate it's considerably less than half the 50 to 60 the city first believed.

"It's probably somewhere between 16 to 20 units," Brodeur told The Pine Cone. "That is a good thing, and it means that I don't have to spend the rest of my year writing violation letters."

Pacific Grove recently began collecting data on short-term rentals so the city council can consider whether it wants to continue to allow such rentals. While some Pacific Grove residents have complained about noise, parking, and other problems, registered home rentals provide $600,000 in transient occupancy tax revenue to the city.

The city has 180 registered short-term rentals, Brodeur said. "That means we have a lot of people going to our restaurants, stores, etc. It's like having another 180-room hotel in town, and that's huge. There is an economic benefit."

But homeowners who don't register their houses and pay tax are subject to penalties, which include not only paying the city back taxes, but half the rental income they've earned.

"We hope that once we notify them" of their illegal units, Brodeur said, "that they will come into compliance or shut down."

To find out how many illegal rentals there are in P.G., the city paid a company $4,000 to search airbnb.com, vrbo.com and flipkey.com — sites that allow homeowners to advertise short-term rentals. The company uses software to identify homeowners, and results are crosschecked with those who have registered their houses with the city.

"It's very difficult to get owner information on some of these homes" without help from the company, Brodeur said.

There are some homeowners, Brodeur said, who earn tens of thousands of dollars each year by renting out their houses, and most of them live elsewhere.

"We are finding that this is big money," he said. "A lot of these homes are investor owned. They don't live here, not even part time. They make their homes available 365 days a year for rent."

CCTV CAMERAS TO BE INSTALLED AT PACIFIC GROVE SCHOOLS

By KELLY NIX

DOZENS OF surveillance cameras will soon be installed in three Pacific Grove schools, thanks to an $18 million education technology bond voters approved late last year.

One of the priorities of Measure A, which passed in November 2014, was to install a new security surveillance system in the city's schools. And unlike security cameras used at home, the system installed at Forest Grove Elementary and the middle and high schools will have a unique feature.

"This system will be using our new fiber optic system that is tied into the Pacific Grove Police Department," Rick Miller, PGUSD assistant superintendent of business services, told The Pine Cone. "And [the police] will be able to access the cameras at each site in real time, even from their portable computers. So if there is an emergency at any of the locations, they will be able to see what is going on."

School district trustees on Oct. 29 approved the camera system and awarded the $243,977 contract to Morgan Hill-based Surveillance Grid.

The new cameras will replace outdated and broken cameras already installed in some school locations, since "the quality of picture is so poor that it's very difficult to make out faces," according to Matt Kelly, PGUSD director of facilities and transportation.

Cameras will be located at spots inside and outside the schools; however, no cameras will be placed in classrooms. Installation will likely begin in a couple of weeks and last through the winter, Kelly said.

Robert Down Elementary, the community school, the adult school, and the school district's offices will also eventually get cameras, though those systems won't be as elaborate as the first three schools; and they won't be installed until after the next series of bonds is released in mid-2016.

"We already have the drawings prepared for all the campuses, so once the [next bonds are] issued, we will be able to quickly go out to bid," Miller said. "And then we would need to find a time that is convenient for installation."

Apart from the security cameras, the tech bond is paying for PGUSD to purchase computers, software and electronic tablets, as well as new technology for student testing.

The bond is being funded by Pacific Grove property owners, who are paying about $18 for every $100,000 of their property's assessed value for 18 years.

High court hears arguments on water district user fee

By KELLY NIX

CALIFORNIA SUPREME Court justices will decide within 90 days if Monterey Peninsula water customers will have to resume paying a "user fee" imposed by the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District on their monthly bills. The fee was used by the water district for administrative and personnel expenses, as well as for environmental work in the Carmel River.

On Tuesday in Sacramento, the court's seven justices heard arguments over the 8.325 percent user fee, which was added to Cal Am bills until 2010, when a California Public Utilities Commission judge said the water district could no longer collect it.

The issue moved to the state's highest court after the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District filed suit against the CPUC challenging its authority to regulate the fee.

The issue before the supreme court is whether the CPUC, which regulates Cal Am, has the authority to terminate a fee imposed by the water district, which has its own mandate and authority under the 1978 legislation that created it. The justices took the case under submission and will issue a written ruling within 90 days.

"Our team is somewhat confident that at least the majority, if not all of them, will rule in our favor," water district general manager Dave Stoldt told the Pine Cone. "But we really don't know."

The last year the fee was collected from Peninsula residents, it raised nearly $3 million — money used to perform lagoon management, steelhead fish rearing and rescues, and other measures, as well as for salaries and expenses for water district staff.

Water district attorney Tom MacBride Jr. told the justices Tuesday that the CPUC lacked authority to regulate the fee.

But CPUC attorney Pamela Nataloni argued that the state agency, regardless of whatever power the water district has to impose fees, retains jurisdiction over Cal Am and the fees that are added to its bills.

MacBride, though, told the justices that the CPUC does not have the authority to regulate the fees, even if they are collected via a regulated utility.

Like Stoldt, water district attorney David Laredo said he is confident the justices will rule in the water district's favor.

"The bottom line is that a clear majority of the justices — judging from the questions — were more questioning of the [CPUC's] position than the water district's position," he said. "Having said all that, who knows what the ruling will be?"

'Honor Flight' offers local vet last chance to pay respects to fallen soldiers

By CHRIS COUNTS

SEVENTY YEARS after flying a P-51 Mustang fighter plane into battle against the Japanese, Dick Trotter took to the skies again — this time for his first visit to the World War II Memorial on the National Mall in Washington D.C.

Trotter, 91, a longtime Pacific Grove resident who now lives at the Cottages of Carmel, was one of about two dozen veterans who traveled from San Francisco to the country's capital Sept. 24-26. His flight was paid for by the nonprofit Honor Flight Network, which has sent more than 100,000 veterans to the memorial over the past decade.

Trotter was just 17 when the Japanese bombed Pearl Harbor in 1941. Like so many young men of his generation, he jumped at the chance to join the war effort. He enlisted shortly after turning 18. "I was sworn in on Dec. 7, 1942 — exactly one year after Pearl Harbor," Trotter told The Pine Cone.

He decided to become a pilot — at least in part because he thought it would give him a better chance of surviving the war. "I saw movies of Marines charging up hills and soldiers in foxholes covered with mud and blood," he recalled. "I thought the Air Force would be a safer place."

When Trotter joined the Air Force, he had never even driven a car — something that was not uncommon at the time. At some point, he was asked to drive a jeep. "I didn't know how to get it started," he conceded.

Despite his lack of driving skills, Trotter became so adept at piloting a plane that he was assigned to fly a fighter. In fact, he developed a bit of a reputation as a daredevil. Others got stuck flying bombers, which turned out to be a much more dangerous job.

"The Japanese weren't worried about fighters," he explained. "They were worried about the bombers."

When another pilot asked his flight instructor why Trotter got to fly a P-51

Dick Trotter

Mustang when he had to fly a bomber, he received a very logical answer. "Trotter is crazy," the flight instructor said. In a fighter plane, "he is only going to kill himself."

Trotter recalled one incident that sealed his reputation as someone who showed little fear in the air. Returning from a mission, he dropped his cigarette in his cockpit.

Unable to reach it, he rolled the plane and let gravity bring the cigarette back to him.

Trotter survived the war unscathed, despite the dangers he faced every time he

Last chance to revel in the centennial of the Panama Pacific International Expo

By ELAINE HESSER

WHAT? YOU weren't going to celebrate the centennial of the San Francisco event that commemorated the opening of the Panama Canal? That's okay. In 1915, The Pine Cone didn't find it too newsworthy, either — that is, until the exposition invited playwright, future mayor and future Pine Cone editor Perry Newberry and the Forest Theater to bring the original production, "Junipero Serra," there at the end of July. More on that in a bit.

The paper didn't report that June 11, 1915, was "Monterey County Day," when dozens of residents turned out to show pride in what they dubbed the "Mission County." However, the Pacific Grove Museum of Natural History tells that part of the story in a small but engaging exhibit that will be on display through January 3.

Tucked away in a corner of the second floor, the exhibit notes that the Monterey delegation was particularly proud of its abalone and that it used the shells in many of its exhibits. There's also a copy of Ernest "Pop" Doelter's San Francisco Hof Brau Restaurant's menu. Doelter is credited with making abalone a popular dish, first at Monterey's Fisherman's Wharf and then in San Francisco.

The menu prominently featured specials including filet of abalone for 50 cents and abalone Newburg for 75 cents.

Also on display are various objects made of abalone shells, including a tiny thermometer mounted on a probably politically incorrect hatchet carved from one pearly, rainbow-colored shell and curiously emblazoned "Chicago, Ill." Because nothing says "Chicago" like abalone.

An explorer's camping spot

Perhaps the most intriguing item in the exhibit, however, is the Vizcaino-Serra chair. Its history purportedly dates to 1602, when explorer Sebastian Vizcaino camped out under a prominent oak tree at the base of the present-day Presidio. According to the museum's blog, 168 years later, Gaspar de Portola arrived with Junipero Serra, who said Mass under what they believed was the very same oak.

That tree became known as the Vizcaino-Serra Tree and soldiered on until it was declared dead at a ripe old age in 1904. That is where circumstances become somewhat suspect.

According to museum spokesman Patrick Whitehurst, after the tree was cut down, its trunk and branches were covered in creosote to preserve them for the ages. Sadly, a construction crew that didn't know the tree's provenance disposed of it in the Monterey Bay.

Then, according to the museum's blog, it languished there until 1905, when a Catholic priest noticed it was missing. Upon hearing of its unseemly disposal, the priest, possibly aided by local businessman Harry Greene, managed to have it located and recovered by some local fishermen. It was service as a deterrent. The knowledge that there is no overnight service should be an embarrassment to our county leadership and an outrage to these taxpayers, who have worked their lifetime to retire in a community that is safe, and where they can expect reasonable response times.

In June of next year, voters will have a choice for responsible county leadership that can directly affect their safety and their lifestyle, and I hope a change is forthcoming.

'Tyranny of spiteful neighbors'

Dear Editor,

Every time I read another update on the Mehdipour property dispute, I'm disgusted. Disgusted with David Potter and his henchpersons who have taken control of private property they do not own; disgusted with deep-pocketed Cypress Point neighbors who don't want their view modified; disgusted by the local culture and prevailing philosophy assuming prominent private property is a community preserve while bearing none of the maintenance costs. According to your Oct. 30 article, Massy Mehdipour is now negotiating with the county on how best to mothball her dilapidated structure. And it is assumed she must absorb all costs to do so. This is outrageous. The structure on the Mehdipour property was a flat-roofed, non-descript, elongated box. Yes, it was designed by a respected Southern California architect, but this home was not representative of his work. I would guess not one of the protesters knew when Mehdipour bought the property that the structure was historic and worth preserving. I feel sure her enemies are using "historic" and "preserve" as tools in their vendetta.

Mehdipour is not a friend nor am I writing in her behalf. I'm writing because I'm ashamed to be a resident and constituent of our local officials who have (1) assumed control of someone else's property, (2) forced the owner to abandon plans for an upgrade and (3) forced the owner to finance the costs to leave it in perpetual limbo.

Currently a blight sits atop Signal Hill. At present it serves no purpose other than being a reminder of the tyranny imposed on the rightful owner by spiteful neighbors and officials.

Lynn Pigott, Pebble Beach

Move Neutra house

Dear Editor,

As a resident of Monterey I have taken an interest in the activities surrounding the Neutra house in Pebble Beach.

My research tells me that the preservationists have been asleep at the wheel. Documentation in support of saving the house has been created post haste and after-the-fact. Let's face it, nobody gave a (expletive) about the house until it was revealed that a new home was to be built in its place. Do I personally think the house should be saved? Yes. Do I think Massy Mehdipour should be able to build an 11,000-square-foot home on her 2-plus acre Signal Hill site? Yes.

How about a compromise: Since the house is currently in ruins anyway, why not deconstruct it and rebuild on another residential site? Relocation does not exclude a house from historical designation or protection.

I propose that Mehdipour pay the cost of the new land, the deconstruction and the relocation. The preservationists (as a collective) would bear the cost of rebuilding according to established historic preservation guidelines. Upon completion, Mehdipour would be free to sell the house with the clear understanding that it is historic. The preservationists get their Neutra house and Mehdipour keeps her Signal Hill land.

Is it a perfect solution? No. The Neutra house would be "better" in its original location. What would have been "best" is if someone had paid some attention to the house in the first place. Permanently mothballing the house is a bad idea as it serves neither party's interest. I believe relocating the house is a fair compromise.

Dolphin Inn to get new name and new look, Brophy's gets more time

By MARY SCHLEY

LOCALS' FAVORITE Brophy's Tavern can continue operating in the space it subleases from the Dolphin Inn at San Carlos and Fourth until January, Matt Crow, president and CEO of the company that purchased the property 18 months ago, said last week.

The hotel, meanwhile, will close for a name change and overhaul, with plans to reopen in the spring. This week, it was shrouded in red and blue tents for fumigation.

Phoenix, Ariz.-based Grossman Company Properties bought the hotel and restaurant in December 2014 for $4.7 million after longtime operator Tom Reiser decided he didn't want to renew the inn's lease.

As a result, after Reiser's lease expired on Halloween, the property came under Grossman's control, and Crow and the operators of Brophy's, Rosemary and Dan Reimer, had been discussing what to do next.

"We have a really good relationship with them," Crow said.

Meanwhile, the new owners are still trying to decide what the hotel's new name will be. "We're spending time looking at the history of Carmel and playing with names that look to the history," he said.

Similar to what Grossman Co. did with La Playa after purchasing it a few years ago under the Classic Hotels group, the new owner will substantially upgrade the rooms with new carpet, paint and furniture.

"We're taking over what is the shell of a building," which was constructed in 1954, Crow said. Not many exterior changes, other than maintenance and touchups, are in the works.

As for Brophy's, Crow extended the Reimers' lease through the end of the year.

"This is a busy time for them," he said, especially since it's a popular spot to take in NFL games and other sports.

And when the company does take over the pub, Crow said, no massive changes are planned for that, either.

"It will still be a local hangout, but from a food standpoint we will probably update the menu some and focus on fresh and local items — a straightforward pub-menu type of thing," he said. "We like the history of that place, too, so we've offered to buy the name from them, and they're still thinking whether they want to sell the name or want to keep it."

Faux fowl, football and fundraising

TO RAISE money for Monterey Peninsula College athletic programs — and provide a crowd-pleasing halftime spectacle — three rubber chickens will be dropped from a helicopter at the school's next game against Gavilan College Saturday, Nov. 7.

Beccie Michael, executive director of the MPC Foundation, plans to drop the chickens as the helicopter hovers a few hundred feet above the field. If all goes according to plan, the faux fowl will land somewhere in the middle of it, where a grid of 100 squares will have been laid out.

Each square will correspond to a ticket, and only 100 of them will be sold at $100 apiece.

It's unclear who came up with the idea for the first fundraising rubber chicken drop, but the idea has caught on with charities in recent years. Former football player and coach Joe Bommarito suggested doing one at Monterey Peninsula College, and last year's inaugural event was declared a success after it raised $8,500.

All proceeds from this year's drop will be donated to MPC athletic department for travel, new uniforms and other expenses.

"This is a great fundraising opportunity for our men's and women's teams," said Birt Johnson, the chair of the Monterey Peninsula College Foundation Booster Club. "We have about 225 student-athletes each year, and we want to be very proactive supporting the athletic department."

The game starts at 6 p.m., and the rubber chicken drop will happen about 7:15 p.m., with cash prizes of $1,000, $500 and $250 being awarded to the top three contestants. The winners are not required to be present.

For tickets, call (831) 655-5507.

Longtime water activist George Riley and his group Public Water Now, which favors a public takeover of California American Water, endorsed Evans. She also has the support of Pacific Grove City Councilman Dan Miller, who has supported Nader Agha's proposed desal operation in Moss Landing, county Supervisor Jane Parker, and Monterey vice mayor Alan Haffa, who was active in the local Occupy movement. Markey also endorsed her.

In terms of a water supply project, Evans said she believes desalination is "one solution," but not the only one.

"Any desal plant is years away and still has many hurdles to overcome," she said. "I think we can look at other thoughts and add to the list of options."

Evans said she supports, "in theory," the water district's wastewater recycling project, called Pure Water Monterey.

"I still have several questions on the project and I haven't been able to get satisfactory answers," she said. "I imagine as I get on the board, I will be able to have those questions answered."

Meanwhile, Gorman said he was "truly saddened" by the low voter turnout for the election, which he said allowed "a very few voters to have extraordinary influence."

Gorman said desalination is a "reasonable solution to our water supply issues," and he encouraged the water district to "press the many agencies and interested parties to work together" to streamline the proposal's permitting process. "The economy and ecology would be much improved by solving the water problem."

When asked what desal proposal he supported, Gorman said "Cal Am's desal project is the closest to being ready. I agree with the existing MPWMD prioritization of [the Cal Am proposal first], with DeepWater as the alternative."

Gorman said he is "conceptually OK" with the district's recycled water project, a partnership with the Monterey Regional Water Pollution Control Agency, but that he would also "review alternatives."

His endorsees included three former Monterey mayors; the Monterey County Hospitality Association; and the Monterey Peninsula Chamber of Commerce.

He cited the lack of press coverage of the water district election as one of the reasons for the low voter turnout.

"A number of my potential supporters forgot to vote or assumed I had it in the bag, which was sadly mistaken," he said. "I will hand it to George Riley, he is an aggressive combatant for his special agenda."

front yard of their home on Oct. 28, he began showing signs of mushroom toxicity, including severe lethargy.

"I knew right away when he came in that something was wrong," Bates explained. "He vomited and there were mushrooms in his vomit. Then there was blood. When I saw the blood I took him to the emergency clinic."

She rushed the puppy to Pet Specialists of Monterey in Del Rey Oaks at about 3 p.m. and he stayed overnight. While veterinarians were able to stabilize Georgie, his condition took a downturn and he died at the clinic the next morning.

"We have a 5-year-old daughter and she is heartbroken," Bates said.

Death caps, one of the most poisonous mushrooms in the world, are also toxic to humans and can cause organ failure. Though Bates said she didn't have the mushrooms Georgie ate tested to determine definitively if they were death caps, she said the deadly mushrooms grow in her family's yard.

With Monday's rain on the Peninsula, she urged residents to be vigilant in looking for mushrooms in their yard or on dog walk routes since they can grow overnight.

"If found in your yard, they should be dug up with a shovel, bagged, and thrown away," Bates said. "The dog should be kept away from the area where they are found for several weeks. If a dog ingests any type of mushrooms, it should be taken to an emergency vet immediately."

including several young kids and teenagers who wanted to defend the bonfire tradition, as well as parents and other beachgoers who enjoy fires. Opponents were there, too, citing improved conditions since a weekend ban was enacted in August and asking for more restrictions or an outright prohibition.

Stedman spoke for more than 45 minutes on the data collected during the past several months, including spikes in “particulate matter” — the pollutants that can sicken people when inhaled — during busy nights on the beach. In essence, he asked what the city could consider an acceptable level of poison, seeing as that’s what wood and charcoal fires emit.

Winemaker Jack Galante, grandson of one of the city’s founding fathers, cast doubt on whether Stedman’s data indicated an actual health risk.

“The air quality [in Carmel] is very good and notably well above average if compared to air quality in any urban area — a comparison that has not been performed,” Galante said. “Without proper scientific studies, it is completely inappropriate to eliminate all fires,” he added.

But San Antonio Avenue resident Mary Liskin remarked that, air pollution or not, fires had become so numerous they were making a mess of the beach.

“We are loving these great resources to death,” she said. “Nobody wants to change a tradition — nobody wants to take these children’s fun away — but it has become a bigger problem, with other beaches not allowing fires and more people coming to our beach.”

Forest and beach commissioner Karen Ferlito said Stedman’s air quality data support a ban.

“Smoke from wood-burning fires is dangerous. This is a fact. We cannot un-see evidence or pretend that it might not be valid,” she said. “We cannot allow the right to breathe clean air to be compromised for a voluntary recreational activity.”

Downtown hotel operator Bobby

Richards encouraged compromise.

“I am pleading to all sides of this debate, please let’s keep cool heads and use this next month to deliver a program that is acceptable to both sides,” he said.

Council members Steve Dallas and Carrie Theis favored retaining some sort of wood-burning fires on the beach, with Dallas proposing a number not exceeding 10, as well as propane fires.

But Mayor Jason Burnett said he envisioned “a future where we had beautiful rings, perhaps a half dozen of them, and propane that would be available.” The rings purchased, maintained and supplied by taxpayers could serve as community gathering places on the beach, and he suggested leaving the details up to city staff.

Ultimately, that’s what he proposed, along with allowing an unlimited number of propane fires brought by beach goers, and his motion passed 3-2.

The council then considered an ordinance declaring beach fires a “public nuisance” — a move that would give the decision more weight with the coastal commission and in court, if it comes to that.

While Theis and Dallas wanted to delay that ordinance until after next month’s coastal commission meeting, the majority felt otherwise and approved very broad language which states that, “No person shall discharge from any source whatsoever such quantities of air contaminants or other materials which cause injury, detriment, nuisance, or annoyance to any considerable number of persons or to the public; or which endanger the comfort, repose, health, or safety of any such persons or the public; or which cause, or have a natural tendency to cause, injury or damage to business or property.”

It also “declares beach fires, including the use of charcoal hibachis, charcoal grills or other like fire receptacles on Carmel Beach, to be a public nuisance.”

The only exception is propane fires.

The new law will come back at the December council meeting for changes or final approval. In the meantime, it is still legal to build a fire on Carmel Beach during the week.

improving the city's infrastructure.

"It's a long list. What he was able to accomplish with council and the community and our staff was pretty impressive and just shows what a great manager he was," Burnett said. "He has a very good ability to find the right match for people's talents and interests. He moved people around in the organization, and I think the organization is performing much better because of that."

In his resignation letter, Schmitz acknowledged the employees' roles.

"Last year, I asked them to put aside the past and to move forward with me," he said. "They responded and answered that call without hesitation."

Burnett praised Schmitz' open communication, including his restarting the practice of sending out a "Friday Letter" that summarized the city's latest business and other happenings each week.

"I hope I was able to rebuild the community's confidence in its town government — that would be my hope for my time there," Schmitz commented Wednesday. "I thoroughly enjoyed working with the council and the staff, and particularly think Jason is just a wonderful leader. He's thoughtful and kind and pragmatic, and also has an eye for building the community for the future. That's rare."

'The right person for the job'

While Schmitz didn't attend this week's city council meetings, many attendees thanked him for his hard work and contributions.

"Doug was the right person for the job, and he came in and did a wonderful job of mending a broken town, mending a broken government," architect Brian Congleton said. "I certainly hope the best for him as he moves forward, and I hope he can move forward with the knowledge that he has done his best here."

City councilman Ken Talmage described Schmitz as "a consummate professional," and said he was "a joy to work with."

"He came on one day's notice, and he left on one day's notice," Talmage said.

Given Schmitz' stated reason for retiring, forest and beach commissioner Karen Ferlito suggested people be mindful of how their words and actions could contribute to stress in others.

"I just wanted to admonish all of us to give thought to what stress we have brought into the equation with each other, with all of our staff," she said. "We're all in this together — this is our town. You can be hard on issues, but you should be gentle on people, and to the best of our ability, we ought to all work together to solve problems."

Resident Carolyn Hardy, who spent hours researching Stilwell-era contracts to help in the city's investigation, said she would have done anything for the city that Schmitz asked of her.

"It was an incredible experience to see him back in Carmel," she said. "And it was incredible to see the quality of his work product."

Calhoun adds another hat

A 31-year member of Carmel P.D. who's risen through the ranks to become chief, Calhoun agreed Monday to divide his time between the police station and city hall until the council hires another city administrator — a process expected to take six to eight months. Calhoun spent several months working as a top administrator under Schmitz after Stilwell left in October 2013 and said he is always willing to assist the city any way he can. In closed session Monday, the council unanimously voted to appoint him as the temporary city administrator.

"With Doug's sudden departure, Mayor Burnett reached out to me, and I was honored and willing to help out any way that I can," Calhoun said this week. "I told them that since I started back in '84, I've always been committed not only to the police department, but to the organization as a whole."

Calhoun said he looks forward to the challenge of assisting in city hall while also running the police department, and he expects to tap into the experience he gained in human resources and managing personnel while serving as interim administrative services director — a position that was created by Stilwell and eliminated by Schmitz.

"It's a lot more responsibility, and I'm going to maintain my title as director of public safety," said Calhoun, whose first regular city council meeting as interim city administrator on Tuesday ran more than eight hours, ending after 1 a.m.

"I have great staff, and without them, I wouldn't be able to do it," Calhoun said. "They do so much behind the scenes to keep this city running, and that's a great feeling for me — knowing I have good personnel that are stepping up and working together as a team."

Calhoun said one of his primary focuses will be continuing to fill vacant jobs.

"The ship is still not fully at sail," he said, with vacancies at the police department, public works, the planning department and elsewhere. "Strengthening the personnel and filling these positions can really help us move forward."

Meanwhile, Cmdr. Paul Tomasi will help lead the police department when Calhoun is tied up at city hall.

"Paul's got the organizational operations and administrative duties," Calhoun said. "I've been working with him very closely since he became the commander."

While some people at the Nov. 2 council meeting questioned whether Calhoun was the best choice to lead the city in the short term, rather than bringing in a temp with more experience, the council solidly backed the appointment.

"We're asking a lot of him, and we want to make sure that everyone recognizes that, and that we're providing the tools and resources he needs," Burnett said.

The council and Calhoun have yet to decide how much extra pay he'll receive for the additional work, and they'll revise his contract in the near future, both men said.

Schmitz, meanwhile, said he'll spend his newfound free time relaxing — and not worrying about city business.

"I just want to take it easy and try to sleep better," he said. And, after the first of the year, he'll resume work on his book detailing the history of Carmel.

"I have a deep, abiding love for the village, and I will continue doing what I can to make it a better place," he said.

it located and recovered by local fishermen. It was identified by its creosote coating, said Whitehurst, who added that the museum was "pretty sure" it was the right tree.

The museum's blog says Greene had part of the tree made into two rustic chairs, which were given to the local chapter of the Native Sons of the Golden West. Historians know that one of them was displayed at the exposition in San Francisco, but then things become murky again, and the other chair seems to have vanished.

It's probably with those missing Jo Mora murals from Carmel Dairy.

The remaining chair — the one from the exposition — ended up in California's First Theatre for a while, then went to Monterey State Historic Park, which lent it to the museum for the exhibit.

For the Carmel-by-the-Sea portion of the story, go to The Pine Cone's online archive and the July 14, 1915 edition, where the fact that Perry Newberry's pageant celebrating Junipero Serra would be performed at the exposition is front-page news.

Apparently, representatives from the exposition heard of or saw the production and deemed it worthy to be performed in front of more than 25,000 people at the exposition, including the governor of California.

The Aug. 4, 1915, Pine Cone report on that performance — which included several hundred performers — ended with this: "To one of the cast, who is in a position to observe, it seemed that in the audience and in the dressing rooms most everybody who had ever been in Carmel, was present." We can only assume that the "one of the cast" was Pine Cone founder William Overstreet, who played the captain of the guards.

Peripheral Neuropathy WARNING!

Monterey, CA- The most common method your doctor will recommend to treat your neuropathy is with prescription drugs that may temporarily reduce your symptoms. These drugs have names such as Gabapentin, Lyrica, Cymbalta, and Neurontin, and are primarily antidepressant or anti-seizure drugs. These drugs may cause you to feel uncomfortable and have a variety of harmful side effects. Peripheral neuropathy is a result of damage to the nerves often causing weakness, pain, numbness, tingling, and the most debilitating balance problems. This damage is commonly caused by a lack of blood flow to the nerves in the hands and feet which causes the nerves to begin to degenerate due to lack of nutrient flow.

Peripheral Nerves

As you can see in Figure 1, as the blood vessels that surround the nerves become diseased, they shrivel up, which causes the nerves to not get the nutrients to continue to survive. When these nerves begin to “die”, they cause you to have balance problems, pain, numbness, tingling, burning, and many additional symptoms. The main problem is that your doctor has told you to just live with the problem or try the drugs which you don’t like taking because they make you feel uncomfortable. There is now a facility right here in Monterey that offers you hope without taking those endless drugs with serious side effects. (See the special neuropathy severity examination at the end of this article.)

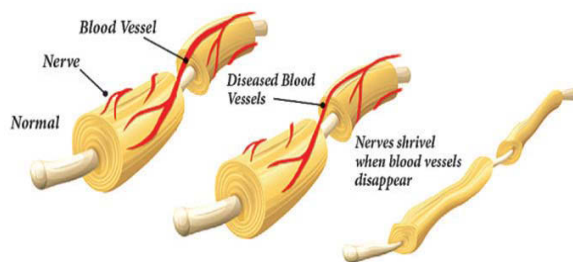

Figure 2: When these very small blood vessels become diseased they begin to shrivel up and the nerves begin to degenerate.

In order to effectively treat your neuropathy, three factors must be determined:

- 1) What is the underlying cause?
- 2) How much nerve damage has been sustained?
NOTE: Once you have sustained 85% nerve loss, there is likely nothing that we can do for you.
- 3) How much treatment will your condition require?

The treatment provided by Natural Foundations Center has three main goals:

- 1) Increase blood flow
- 2) Stimulate small fiber nerves
- 3) Decrease brain based pain

The treatment to increase blood flow utilizes a specialized low level light therapy using light emitting diode technology. This technology was originally developed by NASA to assist in increasing blood flow. The low level light therapy is like watering a plant. The light therapy will allow the blood vessels to grow back around the peripheral nerves and provide them with the proper nutrients to heal and repair. It’s like adding water to a plant and seeing the roots grow deeper and deeper.

The amount of treatment needed to allow the nerves to fully recover varies from person to person and can only be determined after a detailed neurological and vascular evaluation.

As long as you have not sustained at least 85% nerve damage, there is hope!

Figure 3: The blood vessels will grow back around the nerves much like a plant’s roots grow when watered.

Dr. Susan White, DC, at Natural Foundations Chiropractic Center, will do a neuropathy severity examination to determine the extent of the nerve damage for only $60. This neuropathy severity examination will consist of a detailed sensory evaluation, and a detailed analysis of the findings of your neuropathy. Dr. Susan White, DC, will be offering this neuropathy severity examination to first 25 callers.

Call (831) 684-7474 to make an appointment with Dr. Susan White, DC to determine if your peripheral neuropathy can be treated.

Here’s What Our Patients Say...

I have had plantar fasciitis for over a year now. For those who have not experienced it – lucky you. It feels like a spike driven through your heel. Most people say theirs has gone away eventually (usually under a year) mine was stubborn and debilitating in some ways. I am an extremely active person. I’ve had to stop running for exercise and have had to limit so many other activities that involve walking or standing for more than a short period of time. I am by trade an acupuncturist and have tried most every treatment modality short of cortisone injections and vicodin. Nothing has helped. I came out to S.C. to visit a friend who told me about some success Dr. Susan White has had with treating P.F. using laser. I was skeptical since everyone has told me about something that “works” to resolve their P.F. I was also cautiously optimistic. I have only enough time for 4 treatments before I go home. Between the laser treatment and the ‘Rebuilder’ my pain has been reduced by about 75%. I’m writing this during my 4th treatment. I believe this will do the trick. That is HUGE. I am extremely grateful. This will make a huge difference in my life. I have also been very impressed by the level of professionalism here and the wealth of knowledge. Mostly I am grateful for Dr. Susan White determination to do a variety of modalities toward the goal of resolving this issue.

Thank you. - Darcy G.B.

GRAMMY AWARD WINNER TO PLAY THE BLUES — AND GOLF AT PEBBLE BEACH

NEARLY TWO decades after bursting onto the music scene as a teenage blues guitar wizard, Grammy Award winner Jonny Lang takes the stage Friday, Nov. 6, at Golden State Theatre in Monterey.

Just 16 when his debut record, “Lie to Me,” topped Billboard’s New Artist chart, Lang’s 2006 recording, “Turn Around,” earned him a Grammy for Best Rock or Rap Gospel Album.

Between the two recordings, Lang, 34, expanded his musical horizons far beyond the confines of the blues. Such not knowing what’s coming next.”

Lang is eagerly anticipating his visit to the Monterey Peninsula for the same reason many people can’t wait to get here. “I’m a golf addict,” he declared.

In other words, he hopes to play Pebble Beach while he’s here. “It has so much character,” he explained. “And it’s been the site of so many of my favorite golf moments on TV.”

Showtime is 8 p.m. Tickets are $37 to $65. The theater is located at 417 Alvarado St. Call (831) 649-1070.

a transformation often comes with risks — consider the example of Bob Dylan, who was famously booed by fans when he veered away from folk music and picked up an electric guitar. Lang conceded his early success as a blues guitarist was “a bit of double edged sword.”

“It was always in the back of my mind, ‘Whose not going to be pleased with this?’” said Lang of his decision to incorporate other musical styles into his sound. “But it’s not the dominant voice in my head. It used to be more of a concern than it is today.”

On his most recent recording, “Fight For My Soul,” Lang brings together blues, r&b, pop and rock. He’s not sure where his creative journey will take him when he makes his next album.

“What excites me about music is creating — not knowing what’s around the corner,” said the musician, who lists James Taylor and Stevie Wonder as his favorite artists. “That’s fun,

IN TOWN for a three-day retreat, about 40 fine art photographers from throughout Washington, Oregon and California will display their work Saturday, Nov. 7, from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m., in Sunset Center's Carpenter Hall.

Besides offering the photographers an opportunity to share their work, the "PIE Labs" retreat offers them a chance to connect with like-minded individuals. PIE stands for "Photography+Ideas+Experience."

■ The fine art of butterflies

Just in time for the arrival of this year's Monarchs, the Pacific Grove Art Center pays tribute to the black and orange insects with an exhibit of large wooden butterflies hand painted by local artists. The nonprofit gallery hosts a reception Friday, Nov. 6, from 7 to 9 p.m.

The public will have an opportunity to bid on the butterflies and vote for the ones they like best. The winners will be announced after the show closes.

Also, the art center's Holiday Boutique opens its doors for the gift-buying season. The shop will feature handmade ornaments, wrapping paper, holiday cards, holiday wreaths and much more.

Besides the butterflies and the boutique, the nonprofit gallery welcomes three new exhibits. The Monterey Peninsula College Printmakers present "Of Ink and Poetry," a collection of etchings, woodcuts, screen prints, monotypes, mono prints and mixed media prints created by 50 different artists. Printmaker Jennifer Anderson unveils the exhibit, "Discussions of Her Identity: Reflections on Mothering, Family, and Art." And mixed media artist Linda Fillhard, who splits her time between Santa Cruz and New Mexico, offers a display of work

Showcasing a talented local sculptor with a sense of humor, the Nancy Dodds Gallery hosts a reception Friday, Nov. 6, from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m., for a pop-up exhibit by Mark Tanous.

A member of the faculty at Monterey Peninsula College and a Carmel resident, Tanous introduces a series of Porcelain bowling pins. He calls his display, "STRIKE, A Love Story in Porcelain." According to a description of the display, "the pins are a canvas that [Tanous] uses to share ideas and capture icons of our culture."

Also on Saturday, the CPA will be open until 8:30 p.m. Wine will be served, and the nonprofit gallery's annual fundraising "8x10" exhibit is on display.

Belgian brews, Italian wine dinners and Craftsman Exchange

DAMIEN GEORIS, maker of his own Madeleine Wines and winemaker for Georis, has focused his enthusiasm on an additional venture: importing and selling high-quality boutique beers from his native country of Belgium.

The first, Leopold7, is now available in that's been making beer since the 1800s and is named for its first brewer, while the "7" refers to "three grains, three hops and the Leopold Touch," Georis said.

"This beer is brewed with the typical spices of a white beer: cardamom, coriander and orange peel, with a typical floral nose," he said. The brewery found the right balance, he added, between a lighter-bodied beer and one that is quite heavy.

Georis described it as "a luxurious beer in Belgium" and is importing it under his license for Madeleine Wines — an adventure in itself. The first container full of beer was held in the Port of Oakland for a month at a cost of $400 per day to keep it cool so the contents wouldn't spoil.

"We have no idea why," he added.

But the beer survived and has been selling well for around $3.99 per bottle at Surf N Sand and The Cheese Shop in Carmel, and Monte Vista Market, Bottles n Bins and the several local restaurants and stores, and he's working on bringing his next batch to Carmel from another brewery across the world. Ultimately, Georis said he'd like to distribute beers from about five different Belgian breweries.

"Belgium was sort of sitting on its reputation for beer, but now there are young people wanting to get into it and do something new," Georis said. He'd like to see an emphasis on beers using local and organic ingredients.

Another brewery Georis is working to bring to the states is Bertinchamps, which has three different beers. "It's probably going to be the largest of all the brands in my selection of beer," he said.

Named for the farm where it's made and the surrounding town, Bertinchamps is made with the best brewing equipment from Germany, Georis said, by a very experienced brewmaster.

■ Bernardus Lodge hosts Craftsman Exchange

Lucia Restaurant & Bar at Bernardus Lodge in Carmel Valley has organized a

Craftsman Exchange featuring small-farm cheese mongers, heirloom fruit enthusiasts, local beer artisans and wine producers "in a sophisticated setting where alfresco seating, warm hospitality, and vineyard views revive the rituals of the region."

The event, which will cost $95 per person, will take place on the deck of Lucia from 1 to 3 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 7.

Neil Maloney, a second-generation oyster farmer from Morro Bay Oyster Company, will be there shucking oysters, while Laurie Petkus from Carmelo Peak Beef Company will be serving up her grass-fed beef stew. Chef Cal Stamenov will provide tastes of Kobe beef, too.

Alfred Herberman, who owns Carmel Valley Olive Company, will walk guests through an olive-oil and whole-olive tasting, and cheese expert Darren Ryan will share his favorite products from family farms across the country.

Big Sur Bakery will bring wood-fired breads, small farm butter and local sea salt, and chef Anna Steege will serve her fall favorite, pumpkin-apple-chestnut soup. Garrett Bowlus, wine grower for Albatross Ridge Winery, will pour his award winning Carmel Valley wines. Kelsey Larsen of Bernardus will share handcrafted ice creams and cookies.

The California Rare Fruit Growers will bring heirloom apples for tasting, and Griva Vineyards will serve its "legendary apple pie."

Painter Fred Carvell, meanwhile, will display his oil paintings inspired by the Carmel Valley landscape, and Dave Holodiloff and Gene Mason will play some bluegrass tunes. Bernardus Lodge is located at 425 W. Carmel Valley Road at Los Laureles Grade. For reservations, call (831) 658-3400.

Wine dinners at Il Grillo, La Balena

Anna Bartolini, who owns Il Grillo and La Balena restaurants in Carmel with her husband, Emanuele, is organizing wine dinners throughout the year to cover all the regions of Italy. "I am really excited for this dinner and continuing series. I think it will be better than the Italian wine course I took in San Francisco!" she said this week. "I want it to be a class and am hoping that we can have one or two big tables so everyone can see each other and discuss the wines."

First in the series will be the Wines of Piemonte Tuesday, Nov. 10, at 6:30 p.m. at Il Grillo, located on the east side of Mission Street north of Fifth Avenue. The evening will feature "a guided tasting and discussion of classic wines" with Jon Bates of Vias Imports, and will feature the varietals of Gavi, Arneis, Dolcetto, Barbera, Barbaresco, Barolo, Brachetto, Moscato d'Asti and Barolo Chinato.

Featured producers include Produttori del Barbaresco, Damilano, Ca'Viola, Marengo and Broglia. The price for the five-course dinner and tastes of 11 wines is $130 per person, plus tax and tip.

And at La Balena, located on the west side of Junipero north of Sixth, on Wednesday, Nov. 11, Andrea Biatta of Le Marchesine in Lombardia and Cristian Valbruzzoli of Lyra Fine Wines will lead a course in "How to be Italian!" Le Marchesine's sparkling Metodo Classico wines will be featured during the four-course dinner, which will begin at 7 p.m. and include three wines from Le Marchesine, along with glasses of Capichera of Sardegna and Piaggia of Carmignano, both part of the Lyra portfolio.

"Cristian and his wife Christine have a great story. They met in Florence when he owned a wine bar there," Bartolini said. "They only started the company about three years ago but are developing a very solid Italian-only portfolio." The couple "explore and seek out the highest quality, distinctive wines that best represent the character of the region," and "look for wineries with heart, strong values, and respect for Italian wine-making traditions."

The four-course dinner costs $90 per person, plus tax and gratuity. For reservations, call (831) 250-6295 or visit www.ilgrillo-carmel.com and labalena.com.

'The Legacy of Prohibition'

"America's Wine: The Legacy of Prohibition," a documentary created for UC Berkeley's Bancroft Library, will be shown Thursday, Nov. 12, in the Irvine Auditorium at the Middlebury Institute of International Studies. Hosted by the Monterey County Vintners & Growers Association, the showing will also include a tasting reception with notable wines.

The film tells the history of the American wine industry and provides an overview of the legacy of National Prohibition, which ran from 1920 to 1933 and continues to have an impact on winemaking in the United States. The documentary covers a century of wine-making, with interviews and historic footage of the leading families that overcame obstacles to rebuild the American wine industry.

Among those filmed were Kevin Starr, California Librarian Emeritus; Leon Panetta, Former Chief of Staff for President Bill Clinton; and Kathleen Sullivan, former dean of Stanford Law School, as well as winemakers Brother Timothy, Robert Mondavi and Ernest Gallo.

The event will start at 6:30 p.m., and tickets are available for $25 through monterey-wines.org or americaswinescreening.eventbrite.com. Director/producer Carla De Luca Worfolk will introduce the film, and a panel discussion afterward will feature John De Luca, former president and CEO of the Wine Institute.

"Everywhere it's been shown, it's been a sellout," said PR man David Armanasco. "I've seen the movie myself, and it's very, very good. For anyone who's interested in California wines, it's really worth seeing."

It will next be shown in Beijing and Shanghai, China.

Wine fun

A trio of events will involve sommelier and Young's Market wine maven Erin Herendeen-Hill: Wine Down Wednesday at Tarpy's Roadhouse on Nov. 11, Flight Night at Stave Wine Cellar at Spanish Bay on Nov. 12, and a special winemaker dinner at Point Pinos Grill on Nov. 13.

Wine Down Wednesday will feature the wines of Sonoma Cutrer for free tasting from 5 to 7 p.m., as well as have them available for purchase by the bottle or the glass for half price.

Tarpy's is located at Highway 68 and Canyon del Rey in Monterey.

The next evening, also from 5 to 7 p.m., the new Stave Wine Cellar in the Shops at Spanish Bay in Pebble Beach will feature Miner Family Winery and winemaker Gary Brookeman, who will share the winery's high-end Napa Valley Chardonnay, Pinot Noir from Garys' Vineyard in the Santa Lucia Highlands, and the flagship Bordeaux blend, The Oracle. Tickets for the event are $20 per person.

Finally, on Nov. 13 at 6:30 p.m., a winemaker dinner at Point Pinos Grill in Pacific Grove will star Merryvale and Starmont wines, including Starmont Rosé, Merryvale Chardonnay, Forward Kidd Red Blend, Merryvale Cabernet Sauvignon and Starmont Sauvignon Blanc. The cost to attend is $85 plus tax and tip.

To reserve, call (831) 648-5774. Point Pinos Grill is located in the P.G. golf course clubhouse at 79 Asilomar Blvd. in Pacific Grove.

Olivia is a 12-year-old, extra-sweet Chihuahua mix. More than anything, she wants your affection (and lots of belly rubs!). She is crate-trained, quiet and great with other dogs. Olivia came to us from a shelter after being picked up as a stray and she's ready to have a happy ending to her story. Can she be your new furry family member?

for the city as a whole.

"We all know that the stock of inns in town could use some new life, and I think if you look at the collective, this would bring a much needed element to the overall stock of inns we have," he said. "That, overall, is the reason I voted for it five years ago, and I don't see that anything has changed."

But after two motions to that effect failed to pass, with the council voting 2-2 on both, and councilwoman Carrie Theis recused because she has her own hotel just a block away, the council decided to continue the hearing, instead, and allow Miller and Stilwell to come back with revised drawings and answers to some of their questions.

After the meeting, Burnett said he hopes the city can make renovating hotel properties easier, since it's a low-impact way to increase tax revenues without putting more cars on the street or adding development. When inns are upgraded, their room rates increase, and therefore, so does the city's share. Hotel taxes are already the single largest contributor to the annual budget.

"The big picture here is, do we want to send the message to property owners of inns who want to do upgrades that it will be easy to work with the city and get a design that follows all of our rules and all of our guidelines, or will you be second-guessed?" he said. "Our answer to that question will have a significant impact on whether others are willing to step forward and make much needed upgrades in our inn stock."

with impacted counties to distribute portable equipment across high hazard zones so that isolated communities can remove and process wood locally."

Bryan Flores, an aide to 5th District Supervisor Dave Potter, said his office "has fielded a handful of calls and letters from people with dead trees on their properties" and Potter "is working with staff on the county's response to the proclamation."

Previously, the idea of loosening environmental restrictions to accommodate fire protection has drawn fire, including even the threat of legal action from environmentalists who have expressed concern for rare plants and animals. Keig, though, is optimistic the proclamation by the state's most prominent Democrat will help ease their concerns.

"My hope is that this proclamation brings people together so we can create some rational changes," to local regulations overseeing the removal of dead and dying trees, Keig said.

County planning official Mike Novo said the county already has a simplified process for hazardous tree removal.

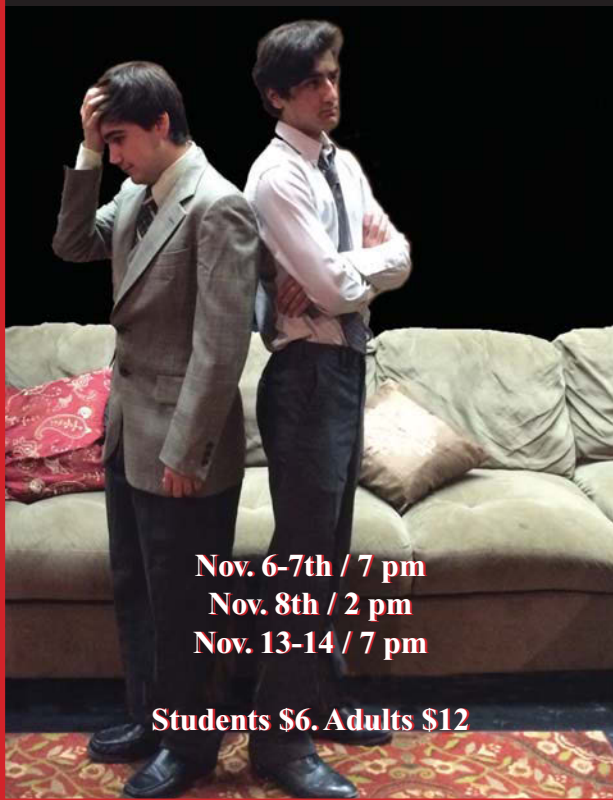

"A fire marshall, arborist or forester can identify hazardous trees that can be removed under a no-fee waiver," Novo explained. "The owner submits that evidence and we process a waiver over the counter at no charge."

But Keig and others want an even more expedient process. "We want a local fire professional to make those kind of decisions, not a bureaucrat in Salinas," he added.

■ Fall colors light up gallery

While the autumn leaves in California aren't quite as dramatic as their counterparts in the eastern United States, they add a display of color to the changing of seasons. To mark the arrival of Fall, The Monterey Bay Plein Air Painters Association presents a group exhibit, "Fall Colors of the Central Coast," at Sunset Center's Marjorie Evans Gallery.

The show has been on display since the first of the month, and the gallery will be the site of a reception Thursday, Nov. 12, from 5 to 7 p.m.

The exhibit continues through the end of the month. Sunset Center is located at San Carlos and Ninth.

Making things worse

AS WE pointed out two weeks ago, the planning commission made a very serious error when it refused to renew the permit for the redevelopment of the Carmel Sands Lodge. Principally, the commission's error was that it didn't have a good enough reason to refuse to let the permit continue.

This week, the city council made things much worse by also failing to renew the permit. While the city council hasn't wrapped up its deliberations on the lodge yet — it postponed a decision because this week's council meeting had already dragged on past 1 a.m. — comments made by two members of the city council left no doubt where they stand. And since those two members — Victoria Beach and Steve Dallas — have the power to stop the project in its tracks, their comments deserve some scrutiny. They also need to be reminded of some basic principles of good government.

■ Earlier decisions by the planning commission and city council should be left alone, unless there is a compelling reason to change them.

Five years ago, the new Carmel Sands Lodge was approved on a collective 9-1 vote by the planning commission and city council after numerous public hearings and extensive revisions. But then the permit lapsed after the owner went broke and couldn't see the redevelopment through. Now, new owners Susan and Mark Stilwell are ready to proceed. Of course, in those five years, the permit has expired. But why do permits expire? Is it to allow bureaucrats simply to change their minds or arbitrarily reinvent the wheel where the project is concerned? No. Permits expire because on rare occasions circumstances dictate that, after a few years have gone by, a project is no longer desirable or appropriate. For example, an earthquake fault might have been discovered where a dam was going to be built, or a daycare center might have opened next door to where a liquor store was once OK'd. When things like that happen, there is no reason why a permit has to be renewed. But when circumstances are exactly the same as they were when the original permit was approved — which is the case with Carmel Sands Lodge — the permit must be renewed. Anything else is simply unfair.

■ Applicants and property owners deserve the benefit of the doubt.

If a project that's up for renewal is a government project, such as a new school, road or park, the officials passing judgment on it have a lot of leeway. But when someone comes hat in hand to the city council for a permit — or, in this case, for a permit renewal — on his own property, he shouldn't be offering himself up for a decision from the gods whether they happen to like what he's up to. First of all, when a project of any significance finally gets before the city council, it has almost always been thoroughly and expensively developed to reflect not only the owner's goals, desires and investment-backed expectations for the property, but also its economic realities and the zoning and other laws it's subject to, not to mention the advice of the architects, engineers and consultants who worked on it, and the professional planners who reviewed it. Accordingly, the plans deserve the benefit of the doubt. Anything else is unfair to the applicant, not only because he has invested so much to get the project ready for a permit, but for the simple reason that it belongs to him.

■ An unpredictable permit process is the enemy of good development.

Many of Carmel's inns are an embarrassment. Some of them look like they were dragged out of a cheap New Jersey beach town of the 1960s. If they were redeveloped, not only would the town look better and have nicer hotels, it would have more jobs and more tax revenues, since people would pay higher prices to stay in the improved rooms. Accordingly, the town's innkeepers should be encouraged to redevelop them. But when the permit process they have to go through is arbitrary or capricious, they become justifiably scared to go anywhere near city hall, which leaves the bad hotels just the way they are.

The Carmel Sands project may not be loved in all its details by everybody, but that is not the point. The point is that it's a major improvement to what is there now, and also that the new project has already been through the permit gauntlet and approved by the council and planning commission by overwhelming votes.

Nothing should stand in the way of it being allowed to proceed now — and certainly not the whimsical feelings of one or two council members. Even local government is supposed to be of laws, not of men.

Letters to the Editor

Summing up the insanity

Dear Editor,

It's really no wonder how the great beach fire debate became so intense. After all, over the years, the area where beach fires are allowed has shrunk considerably.

Let's go back to the 1980s and before: Fires were permitted everywhere on the beach, from Pescadero Canyon to Santa Lucia, which is about a mile.

Then came the first council restriction ... no fires on the beach north of the Del Mar restrooms! Argh! (Chop a third of the area off.) Next came the 1990s, when the council decided to not allow any beach fires north of 10th Avenue ... Oh noooo! (A bit more than a third taken off.)

Now, suddenly, we have a health and nuisance hazard requiring that all fires on the beach be banned. Personally, I don't care, it has no adverse effect on the quality of my life. But, when you take a mile of beach and have 100 fires there on a busy weekend, condense it down to a three block area within a cove where the wind swirls, then I guess you can then say it's a nuisance!

It doesn't take a rocket scientist to see why the smoke has become an issue, since the city government, past and present, has shoved everyone into a corner.

So what's the solution? Rent those that want a beach fire a fire ring with a propane filled explosive projectile? LMAO! Right?

Where will those be stored by the way? City hall? Ask any responsible fire marshal about that and see what answer ya get! Can you spell, “liability”? Just ban all fires except within personal BBQ's under a daily permit ... no fee ... just a record of who has one ... and let those happen once again on the entire beach ... or not ... whatever!

Truly, this is some of the most insane and hilarious decision making I've seen in years! Years, I tell ya!

Good luck with that. And, oh ya, you should cut back on the micromanaging of city staff by the council. You're gonna burn out another city administrator if you don't! There are way too many meetings and waaaay too much involvement in daily ops ... just sayin. You all talk too much about nothing ... it's insane!

That's it for now, folks, but as the election draws closer, I'm sure there'll be more to comment on!

Tim Meroney, Carmel

Dear Editor,

I was astounded to read both your article and editorial regarding Monterey County pulling its overnight sheriff's patrols from our immediate area.

I'm sure our rather inexperienced new sheriff and our very experienced supervisor are aware that the unincorporated areas of Carmel, Carmel Valley, Pebble Beach and Carmel Highlands are home to many seniors, who rely on the sheriff's office to provide was established in 1915 and is a legal newspaper for Carmel-by-the-Sea, Monterey County and the State of California, established by Superior Court Decree No. 35759, July 3, 1952

THE ART OF FAMILY AND A GALLERY OF MEMORIES

LOCAL COUNSELOR Deborah Jacroux wrote to The Pine Cone about her “beautiful sister,” Cindy Wilbur, and nominated her for Great Lives. Wilbur, an award-winning artist, wasn’t entirely sure she wanted to be featured.

“I’m kind of self-conscious about being in the newspaper,” said the 61-year-old, but with Jacroux by her side for support, she told her story. It began in San Diego, where her mother regularly took Wilbur to church, and sometimes gave her paper and a pencil to keep her busy drawing during the sermon.

One Sunday, Wilbur drew a fairly accurate caricature of a nearby parishioner with a rather prominent nose, and it was all her mother could do to stifle her laughter at her daughter’s drawing.

Her parents encouraged all five of their children to develop their talents, and since Wilbur’s was art, her father made a backyard playhouse into a little studio for her. Sometimes, her parents would come out and draw or paint with her.

After high school, she enrolled in college. That didn’t work out, and she became a medical assistant, then got married and began raising a son. She started doing small decorative paintings, which she sold, with her husband’s help. When the marriage ended, she thought she could go on as a painter, but found she couldn’t support herself and her son. She decided to go back to college, with her family’s help.

It took seven years to earn her degree, but she never gave up. In fact, as a student teacher, she posted a Vince Lombardi quote in her classroom. “Winners never quit and quitters never win.”

She didn’t know how significant that motto was about to become for her.

Six weeks from completing her student teaching assignment, the right side of her body was paralyzed when an arteriovenous malformation — an abnormal, spaghetti-like tangle of blood vessels — on the left side of her brain ruptured. Wilbur is right-handed.

At 39, she underwent brain surgery, and the neurosurgeon told her she probably would never walk again. Her family would have none of that. Her mother fought back with prayer, and Jacroux with encouragement and humor.

One day, Jacroux watched as Wilbur struggled to eat breakfast, lifting her right arm with her left hand. After a minute or two, Jacroux said, “Why don’t you just eat with your left hand?” The sisters still laugh at the memory of that moment.

But at the time, Wilbur said, it was frightening to wake up every morning and see a wheelchair in her room, and think, “That’s for me.”

Still, she was a single mother of a young boy, and for his sake, she was determined to get well.

They moved back in with her parents, who were facing their own challenges. Her mother was on oxygen and her father had recently had open-heart surgery. With staples still in his chest, he waited on her with a towel folded over his arm like a formal waiter, asking what “Madame” needed.

Her mom worked Wilbur’s legs daily to keep her muscles from atrophying. For her own part, she visualized herself walking, worked hard and stubbornly refused to quit.

Even her son — who was all of 9 — pitched in. When she worked her way up to a walker, they played a game where he would pull it just out of her reach and say, “C’mon Mom, one more step.” He did the same thing when she graduated to a cane.

When she walked across the stage at her college graduation with that cane, her son was in the audience screaming, “That’s my mom!” Today she walks with only occasional difficulty.

The sisters started coming here when a third sister, Georgia Robertson, bought a vacation home in the Highlands. They decided that one day, they would all live here and be “three sisters by the sea.” Today, Jacroux shares Wilbur’s home near Junipero and First, and Robertson has a home in town, too, so, mission accomplished.

She met her husband, Mark Wilbur, not long after her hospitalization, and it wasn’t much longer that the two of them were relaxing on a beach in Tahiti. “I couldn’t believe it,” she said. Not only was she alive, well and walking, but she’d gone from being a single mom weighed down with student loans, to being on a tropical vacation with the man she loved.

Mark won Jacroux’s approval when he showed her blueprints for a studio he planned to add to the back of his home. “It reminded me of our father giving her the playhouse. He was offering her her dream,” she said.

Wilbur spent several years returning her parents’ love, helping to care for her mother and father with the rest of the family. During her mother’s last hospitalization, she made Wilbur promise that she would go back to painting.

Cindy Wilbur

Great Lives

By ELAINE HESSER

She kept her promise after her mother died, wearing her mother’s wedding ring on a necklace as she worked. She entered her first juried show, and her father, although he was blind, was her biggest cheerleader. “He couldn’t see a thing,” she laughed, “but he said, ‘You should get first place!’” and told her that her painting was the best in the show.

He died seven months after her mother, and for a few years, Wilbur’s paintings reflected her grief.

Her works gradually became joyful celebrations of the landscapes she finds here. They’re in galleries in four states, with more success on the horizon. She also does plein air and enjoys daily walks, something for which she’s consistently thankful. She’s been happily married for 18 years, and her son, now 31, is a graphic designer.

“I don’t like to dwell on it,” she said of the difficult years in the wake of her illness, “but I don’t want to ever forget.”

Random nuggets of nuttiness

NOTHING IN the news surprises me anymore. Tropical puffer fish washing up on the shores of Monterey Bay. Roving packs of ravenous coyotes in Asilomar dressing up as Little Red Riding Hood and snatching Halloween candy from children. OK, I made that last part up. But still, it’s been a weird few weeks.

First off, sheriff’s deputies are no longer patrolling our neighborhoods at night. Keep it to yourself, though — we don’t want the bad guys to know. We’re told from now on deputies will be too busy at the jail babysitting criminals that are already behind bars. Makes perfect sense.

At least they’ll have time to see the new fall TV lineup. It’s a known fact that the main job of a babysitter is watching television.

Last week I tuned in to “Game of Drones.” A new series about a monotone-speaking, post-apocalyptic, mutant zombie, serial-murdering, terrorist alien vampire from a galaxy far, far away, who crash lands in the fracking fields of North Dakota, and hooks up with a tattooed supergirl CyberCriminologist robot hacker who has invaded the body of a Kardashian, and is working to make the world safe for ordering online, while heading off a comet that’s on a collision course with Donald Trump’s hair. It’s a romantic comedy.

Made me realize how much I miss “The Mary Tyler Moore Show.”

We also learned that the drought is worse than we thought. A “small fire” was reported at the Monterey Bay Aquarium. Apparently they’ve been taking water restrictions a little too seriously. When a “Splash Zone” bursts into flame, things are too dry.

And just when we need a diversion, Playboy Magazine says it will no longer have nude centerfolds. I admit that in my youth, I sometimes perused those glossy pages — but strictly for the jokes. I’ll do anything for a laugh.

Playboy’s publisher says that Playmates can no longer stay abreast of the burgeoning sexual content on the web. Today it seems everyone is going on YouBoob.

Some nuttiness didn’t make the papers: a certain local cable company whose initials are Comcast offered a helpful recorded message after the big PG&E power failure. When customers called to report continued outages of their cable, phones and WiFi, they were told to log on to the company’s website and sign up for Twitter alerts. That’s like being told to avoid darkness during a power outage by turning on the lights.

Might be a coincidence, but ever since that transmission tower collapsed, my computer has been crashing. I’m not ruling out software glitches in the human who uses it.

My troubles with tech started years ago in a galaxy far, far away — San Jose in 1978. I was at a big bookstore doing an autographing for my first joke book when a scruffy-looking hippie kid (long hair, beard, sandals) stepped up to the autograph table. He asked me to sign a couple of books. Then he gave me a Xeroxed handout for a dial-a-joke service he operated out of his dorm room — an answering machine with a recording of him reading the latest Polish joke. He billed himself as “The Crazy Pollack,” and he asked permission to read some jokes out of my book. Permission granted.

Fast forward several years. Time Magazine had a cover photo of two young guys who had just revolutionized the tech world. One of them looked familiar. So I went to my files and retrieved the Xeroxed handout from the Crazy Pollack. Hair was shorter, beard was trimmed, but no question, it was hippie jokester Steve Wozniak, now co-founder of Apple.

Wilde Times

By LARRY WILDE

Steve continued to turn up at my autographings occasionally. We became friendly, and eventually we teamed up to co-author a computer joke book. After years of chiding me to give up my typewriter habit, he forced the issue by giving me my first computer. Life has never been the same since, and I don’t know whether to laugh or cry. When I think of all the fun I’d have missed dealing with glitches and crashes ...

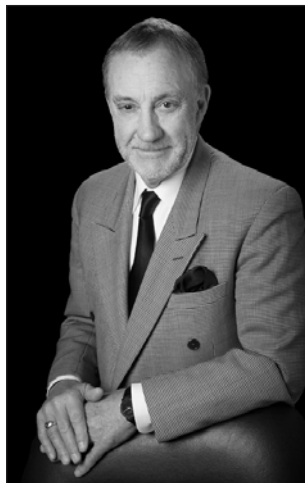

High tech rules everything now, even local real estate. One Carmel realtor has been showing South Coast properties to a couple of young Silicon Valley techies. At a house in Big Sur when they came to a state-of-the-art kitchen equipped for a pro chef, the realtor said, “And this is the room where you microwave your take-out.”

The young wife said, “Cool! There’s an app for that, right?”

When they entered the sprawling living room, the young husband remarked, “Awesome! This place is big enough to do wheelies on my Segway!”

Finally, a nugget of nuttiness out of Monterey where a woman threw a White Elephant Halloween Party for 19 of her closest girlfriends. Guests were told to bring an item for a treat exchange — something they were tired of, couldn’t use anymore and wanted to get rid of.

I hear the party was a big success — 11 of the 19 women brought their husbands.

HONOR

Before the conflict ended, he had flown about a dozen combat missions in the Pacific Theater, where he escorted bombers to and from their targets.

A new chapter begins

After the war, Trotter followed the example of countless veterans and married his sweetheart, Lee. They eventually had four children.

Trotter also reenlisted in the Air Force, working for nearly two more decades on the ground. The job wasn't as exciting as escorting bombers, but it was certainly more secure. "My wife said I could go back in, but I couldn't fly," he explained.

Like so many former soldiers, Trotter shares humorous wartime stories with great detail and ease. But when the conversation turns to the harsh reality of war, or close friends who died in battle, the words don't come quite as easily. The sadness on his face is unmistakable.

Trotter comes from a generation of men who don't share their feelings much. But it was clear to his daughter, Cheryl, who accompanied him to Washington, D.C., that the trip to the World War II Memorial was a deeply emotional experience for him and his fellow veterans.

"He was definitely touched," she said. "It was moving, but in a quiet way. There were tears in his eyes when he talked about soldiers who had fallen. He didn't talk a lot, but you could tell there was a sense of pride and reflection. This was a war with a really clear mission. They were trying to save the world. It was the right thing to do."

About a year after retiring from the military in 1964, Trotter and his family moved to Pacific Grove, where Lee opened Trotter Antiques and Dick immersed himself in a variety of activities and pursuits, including traveling, collecting coins, serving as president of the Pacific Grove Rotary Club and winning a national Rotary Club golf tournament. The couple only recently moved to Cottages of Carmel.

The clock is ticking

Time is running out for the few World War II veterans still alive. According to the Veterans Administration, about 500 vets die each day. That's why the Honor Flight Network is trying to fly as many of them as possible back to Washington D.C. to see the memorial.

"I feel a personal obligation to help facilitate special trips to Washington for these World War II veterans to see their memorials," said Carl Stewart, the president and co-founder of Honor Flight Bay Area Foundation, one of 135 affiliated Honor Flight groups in the country. "Not only did they survive the Great Depression, they preserved our freedoms by defeating tyranny on a global scale. They are truly the greatest generation, and recognizing them with a trip to see their memorials and experiencing camaraderie again with their fellow veterans is the right thing to do."

'Honor Flight' film plays at CHOMP

Calling attention to both the Honor Flight program and diminishing number of World War II veterans who are still alive, a documentary film about the flights will be screened on Veterans' Day, Wednesday, Nov. 11, at Community Hospital's Westland House.

The film will begin at 2 p.m., and a talk will follow. For reservations, call (831) 649-7758.

new, Youth Music Monterey County welcomes composer and multi-instrumentalist Van-Ahn Vo to Sunset Center Sunday, Nov. 8.

Vo, who plays the dan tranh zither, a traditional Vietnamese instrument, will accompany YMMC's junior youth and honors orchestras at Sunset. Her laurels include earning an Emmy Award, receiving an Academy Award nomination and winning Vietnam's national dan tranh contest.

"It's a real treat to have such an accomplished musician work with our students," said Dorothy Micheletti, president of YMMC. "It's an exciting opportunity, and the kids are working hard to rise to the occasion."

The program includes music by Tchaikovsky, Prokofiev, Saint-Saëns, Corelli, and music by contemporary Vietnamese musicians, including Vò. Micheletti credits music director and conductor Farkhad Khudiyev for creating such an interesting program. "He just excels at putting together programs that include artists from other countries and traditions that you wouldn't normally associate with classical music," she added.

The concert begins at 2 p.m. Tickets are $20 for general admission, $10 for seniors and $5 for students. Sunset Center is located at San Carlos and Ninth. Call (831) 375-1992.

■ Red hot fiddler

A classically-trained violinist and one of Irish music's most accomplished fiddlers, Winifred Horan performs Sunday, Nov. 8, at St. Mary's By-The-Sea in Pacific Grove.

Before co-founding the critically-acclaimed group, Solas, Horan was a member of Cherish the Ladies, an all-female Irish music ensemble. "She's one of the hottest fiddlers on the Celtic music scene," said Jackie Pierce, who helps organize concerts at the P.G. church.

When she plays at St. Mary's, Horan will be accompanied by Johnny Connolly on accordion and Cary Novotny on guitar. All three musicians sing. "Johnny is now touring with Solas, while Cary backs up some of our favorite musicians," Pierce added. "It's going to be a great show."

The music starts at 3 p.m. Tickets are $25 for general admission and $8 for kids 12 and under. St. Mary's is located at Central and 12th. Call (831) 224-3819.

Dylan Thomas, my younger brother, and the Great A&P Tea Company

I MISSED two birthdays during the last week of October: Dylan Thomas' 101st, and my younger brother Larry's 70th. I missed Dylan Thomas's other 100 birthdays, but this is the first time in many years I misplaced my brother's.

Dylan is, by consensus, one of the leading poets of the 20th century. If Larry ever wrote a poem I'm not aware of it. Google "Dylan Thomas" and you'll get 71,600,000 results in

.28 seconds. Google Larry and you get a professional poker player (not my brother) and some guy who is a Ph.D. at the Taos Institute (also not my brother).

I have four brothers spaced out across the country. Hmm. Rephrase that please, because it sounds like I have four spaced-out brothers. Not true. All are sober pillars of their communities. Larry is the closest, geographically. He lives in the Los Angeles area.

Dylan visited Carmel twice, in 1950 and 1952. He is purported to have visited both Henry Miller and Robinson Jeffers and to have quaffed a few libations at the La Playa. Larry's been here couple of times, too. Neither time did we go to Tor House or the Miller Museum in Big Sur, although I think we went to Nepenthe.

I was introduced to Dylan in high school through his poem, "Do not go gentle into that good night" — a poem I couldn't really appreciate until I started experiencing the infirmities of my advanced years. I knew Larry from the day he was born, but wasn't introduced to him as a person until many years later.

Nine years is quite an age gap between siblings. When he was in the first grade, I was dating Mary Ann Gugino, a dark-eyed angel who filled out a pale blue cardigan sweater in a manner that had my imagination going directly to a confessional without passing Go, and when he was walking into high school, I was walking down the aisle with my bride.

Later, when I was schlepping medical books to doctors in white coats in Michigan and Indiana, Larry was slogging through rice paddies in Vietnam getting shot at by guys in black pajamas.

How does the Great A&P Tea Company factor into this? When I was 13 years old I got a job as a stock boy at the neighborhood A&P supermarket. The store manager, Mike Piatek, was the best boss I ever had. His management style was one of paternal benevolence. Customer service was Mike's priority. I never saw a customer leave the store unhappy. Wrongs were made right and dissatisfactions were turned into smiley faces immediately.

That, in itself, may not be unusual. But Mike was memorable because he let kids like me develop as employees and as people while being part-timers. He gave us responsibility beyond our years — and gave us the clout to go with it. Mike believed that responsibility without authority was a formula for failure. The cop-out phrase, customers hear so often today, "I only work here," may have been the only thing that incurred Mike's wrath.

Flash forward decades later. Larry is spending a weekend here. It is the first time in our lives that we are able to explore who we are to each other as adults. I learn that Mike Piatek mentored him in the same gentle way he did me.

Then the conversation turned to our mother's death and whether we did right by her.

She was living in Florida when, at age 89, already relegated to a wheel chair, she had a massive stroke, paralyzing her entire left side and leaving her without the ability to swallow. She underwent a percutaneous endoscopic gastrostomy procedure that allows nutritional support for patients who cannot take food orally. Aware of her condition, she tried to pull the IV tubes from her arm and made it abundantly clear she didn't want to live in that condition.

I remember saying that if it weren't such an unpleasant way to die I would let her starve to death. A nurse who overheard said that it didn't have to be that way. That led to a consultation with our mother's doctor and other medical personnel to admit her to hospice care where she would be sedated until she passed quietly.

Naturally, we discussed everything with her. The neurologist said she would never regain the ability to swallow and she would remain paralyzed, finishing out her life in an extended care facility. She chose to exit through door No. 1, the hospice.

In "Do not go gentle into that good night," Dylan Thomas was actually writing about his father. There is a time, though, when the raging against the dying of the light becomes a losing strategy. I remember seeing our mother more peaceful than she had been in years. No needles were penetrating her black and blue parchment-thin skin. She was not having negative reactions from the mass medicines she had taken every day. We all had the opportunity to thank her for the memories and to say goodbye, looking forward to the day we would see her again.

I'll probably miss Dylan Thomas' birthday again next year. You can bet I'll remember Larry's. And the next time he visits, I'd like to introduce him to Robinson Jeffers and Henry Miller.
