MAYORS, COUNCIL GIVE FREEMAN A GRATEFUL FAREWELL

By MARY SCHLEY

FIVE FORMER mayors — including Clint Eastwood — along with current and former council members, honored outgoing city attorney Don Freeman this week for his more than three decades on the job. Freeman, who is still in practice and provides counsel for the City of Seaside, among other clients, retired from his job as city attorney in Carmel and handed the reins over to Glen Mozingo, who assumed the post earlier this summer.

At Tuesday's city council meeting, Freeman watched — occasionally suggesting the council had more important business to tend to — as the current and former officials took their turns at the mic, starting with Charlotte Townsend, who was mayor when Freeman came to work for the city.

While "slackness and not paying attention and malfeasance," were problems at city hall when she became mayor, Townsend said, Freeman and then-city administrator Doug Schmitz spent entire weekends working on their own time to help resolve the city's issues.

"I hope the community is exceedingly grateful, as I am," she said, referring to Freeman as "a legal eagle and a humanist," who was known not only for fighting for the city in court, but for "going and helping little old ladies out of their bathtubs."

She said she was glad to honor him, but sad to see him go.

"You're the greatest attorney we've ever had," Eastwood, who was mayor from 1986 to 1988, told Freeman. "In

Supes unanimous in vote to protect county's 20,000 'Dreamers'

By KELLY NIX

A WEEK after the Trump administration announced it would phase out the executive order shielding illegal immigrant children brought into the United States by their parents from deportation, the Monterey County Board of Supervisors passed a resolution to support them.

On Tuesday, the elected officials voted to adopt a resolution "supporting Dreamers and the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals Program," which the Obama administration established in 2012. The program allows those who arrived in this country before their 16th birthday to also get work permits.

Before the supervisors cast their vote Tuesday, 5th District Supervisor Mary Adams sent a message to the DACA recipients, who are said to number about 800,000 nationwide, including 20,000 in the county.

"I want to thank the Dreamers, specifically," Adams said. "You are our future."

'Racist,' 'hateful'

Using labels that have become ubiquitous for anyone who opposes DACA or illegal immigration in general, several proponents of the resolution called the decision to phase out DACA "racist," "discriminatory" and "bigoted."

Program advocate Israel Villa thanked 1st District Supervisor Luis Alejo for his support of Dreamers.

"It's an important step at a time our folks are under attack," Villa said. "I think it's important that we resist this racism, this racist agenda that's going on in our nation."

Similarly, 4th District Supervisor Jane Parker called the president's decision "hateful."

As the administration "continues to undermine the safety and security of various groups of people ... we must continue to stand together," Parker said.

Third District Supervisor Simón Salinas called Trump's move "mean-spirited," and said he hopes the resolution will urge Congressman Jimmy Panetta "to do everything humanly possible to figure out a compromise" on immigration reform.

Trump's decision gives Congress until March 2018 to work out a replacement for DACA, at which point the dreamers would be eligible for deportation.

Val Verde project rejected again, developer still hopeful

By CHRIS COUNTS

A PLAN to build 31 units, including seven at below market rates, on Val Verde Drive at the mouth of Carmel Valley was shot down again Sept. 12 — this time by the Monterey County Board of Supervisors on a unanimous vote.

The hearing marked the second time the project was rejected by the supervisors. First proposed in 2006, it's been before the county's planning commission three times.

But developer Brian Clark told The Pine Cone he still wants to build the project — and he's hoping to get a boost from new state regulations intended to make it easier for affordable housing to be approved.

Located just east of Carmel Rancho shopping center, the project originally called for 42 units, including 10 that would be affordable. It has since been scaled back, but that hasn't dampened the opposition to it.

At this week's hearing, attorney Molly Erickson blasted Clark's plan — just as she has done previously.

"Everyone is opposed to this project," Erickson said. "There's a lot not to like about it. It's essentially asking for a lot of special treatment. All the inclusionary units are crammed together on one lot. It stretches the county codes way past the breaking point."

Resident Margaret Robbins called the development "a flawed project" that will "destroy the rural character" of the neighborhood.

Factor death blamed on car 'malfunction'

By MARY SCHLEY

DAVIS FACTOR — grandson of legendary makeup company founder Max Factor, and a generous supporter of several key Monterey Peninsula institutions — died in an automobile accident in Sonora a week ago Sunday at the age of 82.

Davis Factor in 2001

His wife of 17 years, Christine, 66, was driving their Lexus on Highway 108 in the Sierra foothills around 2:30 p.m. Sept. 3 when, for unknown reasons, she let the car drift off the road and hit a large tree, according to the California Highway Patrol. Davis and another passenger, 16-year-old granddaughter Sara Hahl, were airlifted by helicopters to separate trauma centers in Modesto, and he later succumbed to his injuries. Christine was taken by ambulance to a third hospital in Sonora.

Daughter Emily Factor told The Pine Cone the crash was caused by "a malfunction" of the Lexus, and that Factor's

USING HIS phone to record a torrential downpour at Sequoia National Forest where he and his two kids were camping Labor Day weekend, Chris Lovera joked. "Man, we picked a good weekend to come backpacking, didn't we?"

Shortly after tucking the phone into his left breast pocket, it happened.

While huddled under some trees next to Jennie Lake, lightning struck a lodgepole pine before hitting the family, hurling their bodies into the air and scattering them on the ground several feet apart.

Nick Barton, an eyewitness to the Sept. 3 strike, would later say it looked like the family had been "blown up."

Unconscious, Lovera, 51, revived to the cries of his son, Aiden, 12, a P.G. middle schooler who had also been knocked out but was the first to awake. "He was screaming, 'Daddy, Daddy,' in the most primal way," the Pacific Grove resident said Sunday. "I looked at him and saw blood all over his face. He thought I was dead."

Lying flat on his back, Lovera was paralyzed and had suffered a ruptured left eardrum. He was bloodied and blackened, but alive. Most of his clothing had been blown off his body, while other bits were fused to his skin.

When he came to, one of the first things he saw was the horrifying image of his daughter Nadia, 9, face down in the dirt before she had regained consciousness.

Reigning retrievers

EVER SINCE she was a kid growing up in Carmel, her family has had golden retrievers. She considers them the ultimate family dog and the classic canine for the town. She also feels their demeanor is a lot like her own – easy-going, friendly, loyal and eager to please. Her dogs, Shanley, 11, and Declan, 8, also share her trait of bright eyes and reddish-gold hair.

In keeping with her Irish heritage, she always gives her dogs Gaelic names of special significance. Shanley's father was named Captain, and Shanley means "hero's child." Declan's name means "saint." She chose it because she wanted him to be a good boy.

When she took Shanley to help her pick out a puppy at the breeder, one of the pups leaned in and patted Shanley on the head with his paw. And then Shanley leaned in and kissed the dog who would be named Declan. That's when she realized the choosing was not up to her.

Shanley came from a family whose little girl's 4-H project was to breed her dog and see that the puppies were placed. Shanley's person took one look at the fat little golden retrievers and knew she wanted one. -Besides, she liked the 4H story.

Shanley and Declan are practically local legends. They live in Carmel Woods, are frequently seen about town, and reign as the most rambunctious retrievers on Carmel Beach. Their online following is equally impressive. One their Instagram accounts, Declan has 18,500 followers, and Shanley has 3,000.

"These dogs can't get enough of the beach, swimming, floating or chasing a ball into the sea," she said. "Declan loves to body surf, to ride the waves. He'll look over his shoulder, watching and waiting till he can catch a wave. Shanley prefers to stroll into the surf at low tide and soak it up, almost like a spa day. We love it here. I moved back to Carmel for my dogs."

Commission backs down on story pole requirements

By MARY SCHLEY

AFTER INITIALLY saying they wanted all but the smallest building projects staked and flagged with 2-by-4s and orange netting, so that neighbors and passersby can envision what the changes or new construction will look like, and that the height of story poles should be certified by a surveyor or engineer, planning commissioners this week decided to relax their proposed rules a bit. The policy remains under discussion and will likely be considered again in October.

Last month, senior planner Marnie Waffle asked for feedback on the city's requirements for flagging and staking, which have been fairly casual, leading to conflicts and confusion for neighbors, planners and builders. The poles and netting are expensive but effective tools for allowing people to envision a project's potential impacts on light, privacy and views by outlining height, mass and shape, but arguments have arisen over their accuracy.

Based on commissioners' comments Aug. 23, Waffle drafted two potential versions of the policy. Version 1, which reflected all of the feedback, calls for flagging and staking all projects exceeding 40 square feet, and certification of their height by a surveyor or engineer. The planning director could not waive the story-pole requirement for small projects that can be approved over the counter.

Version 2, however, would be more lenient, requiring story poles for projects exceeding 120 square feet, allowing the director to waive the requirement for small projects that wouldn't be subject to public hearings, and requiring official certification of height only for more significant proposals, such as larger additions and new homes.

"In staff's opinion, Version 2 of the policy is more practical and less onerous for property owners," Waffle told commissioners

Sept. 13. "For example, if the commission decides to establish a threshold as low as 40 square feet, then property owners would be required to install story poles for new storage sheds."

In general, commissioners reversed their earlier, more stringent stances, favoring Version 2, though they differed on the minimum size of proposed projects that should be flagged and staked. Commissioner Stephanie Locke was fine with 120 square feet, while commissioner Julie Wendt wanted the minimum reduced to 80 square feet. Either way, if the planning director believes the project wouldn't impact anyone, he could waive the requirement altogether.

"I support Version 2 and echo what Julie Wendt said about lowering it to 80 square feet," commissioner Michael LePage said, because in his personal experience, even the construction of a storage shed can negatively affect a neighbor.

Case-by-case

He also said planners could determine on a case-by-case basis whether the height of the story poles should be certified by a third party, such as a surveyor or engineer.

"We don't want to create an overly [onerous] or expensive process," LePage commented.

Commissioner Gail Lehman said story poles shouldn't be necessary for most over-the-counter proposals, because they're "so small," and chair Don Goodhue also favored Version 2 and said he didn't feel particularly strongly about the minimum square footage.

In addition, Goodhue noted that certification would be of just the highest point, not of every pole, which would be considerably more expensive.

"We should probably say, 'the highest point, or area as determined by the planning

Verdicts, pleas and sentencings announced by Monterey County District Attorney Dean Flippo

July 20 — Carmen Rogelio Maldonado, 28, entered pleas of no contest to the crimes of kidnapping a child under the age of 14, child abuse and auto theft and will receive an eight-year term in the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation.

On April 14, 2016, a black 2015 Honda Accord was stolen from a driveway of a residence in the City of Soledad with a 2-year-old baby boy secured in the back seat. The father of the child left the child and car momentarily unattended in the driveway at approximately 6:45 a.m. to run back into the house. The defendant seized the opportunity to steal the vehicle from the residential neighborhood. The father called 911 and the Soledad Police Department responded. An Amber Alert was issued by the California Highway Patrol.

The investigation determined that Maldonado, a resident of Gonzales, drove the vehicle north on Highway 101 and parked the car, with the child still secured in an infant seat, in a shed off River Road at approximately 8 a.m. Maldonado locked the child inside the car and took the child's bag containing asthma medication.

At approximately, 1:30 p.m., an employee of Taylor Farms happened by the shed and recognized the vehicle from the Amber Alert. He called the police who responded and broke the driver's side window to rescue the child from the stolen Honda. The child was warm and sweaty but appeared unharmed.

Later the child's allergist, Dr. Daniel Mora of Monterey, told the district attorney's office that an asthma attack caused by stress, excessive crying or dehydration could have been fatal.

The defendant admitted culpability as charged before the Honorable Judge Pamela Butler.

July 20 — Moises Salcido, 23, was sentenced to 16 years to life in prison after a jury convicted him of first-degree attempted murder and he pled guilty in two unrelated cases to domestic violence and assault with force likely to cause great bodily injury.

On August 2, 2016, the mother of the defendant's children was leaving her friend's apartment and entered her vehicle. At the same time, the defendant entered her vehicle through the passenger side. An argument ensued and the defendant proceeded to stab the victim. She suffered two stab wounds on her left elbow, one on her right forearm, and two on the top of her head. She was treated for her injuries at Natividad Medical Center.

On August 26, 2016, another victim and two of her relatives were seated around the kitchen table at their aunt's house. The defendant, who is the second victim's cousin, entered the house and accused her of talking badly about him. Within seconds the defendant began to stab the victim. He stabbed the victim five to six times as she sat at the kitchen table before the two other relatives could pull the defendant off the victim. The victim attempted to leave the house, but the front door was locked. Before the victim could leave, the defendant stabbed her again in the head and neck at least five to six more times. The relatives again pulled the defendant off the victim and he immediately fled the area. The victim was transported to Natividad Medical Hospital. She suffered 11 stab wounds to her head, neck, upper body and back. Her kidney and liver were punctured in the attack. The jury convicted the defendant of attempted murder for this crime.

On April 7, 2017, deputies at the Monterey County jail responded to booking cell No. 3 and found an inmate who was lying on the ground unconscious. Upon reviewing video footage, the defendant was observed throwing what appeared to be wet toilet paper at the lens of the camera. The lens was covered for approximately two minutes, then uncovered. After the lens was uncovered, the defendant punched the victim multiple times in his head. The victim fell to the ground and the defendant continued to punch him another 6 to 8 times. The defendant then stomped on the back of his head two times.

Serial thief caught again — this time with stolen gun, drugs and syringes

By MARY SCHLEY

A PACIFIC Grove man who has been in and out of prison for various drug crimes, thefts and break-ins was caught again earlier this month, after Monterey County Sheriff's Deputy Mike Smith spotted a suspicious car on Sylvan Road in Monterey and went to investigate. Jeffrey Rutt, sentenced in March 2016 to three years in prison for a string of vehicle break-ins, is now in Monterey County Jail on multiple new felony charges.

The car, which had broken windows, was parked off Aguajito Road. When Smith was on patrol nearby, he noticed a "guy who had scabs on his face" and was filling the tank with a gas can.

"There's no gas station near there, and broken windows are generally a stolen car," Smith explained.

'Bouncing around'

When he started talking to Rutt — who was convicted in January 2016 of thefts from locked and unlocked cars in Pebble Beach, Carmel Valley, Monterey and Carmel that Smith helped investigate, and has prior drug convictions from 2011 and 2014 — Smith noticed he was clearly under the influence.

"He kept getting in and out of the car, and was bouncing around," he said. "He wasn't listening."

Smith finally got Rutt in handcuffs and searched him, finding a loaded handgun in his pants, and drug paraphernalia in his pockets. In the car, which belongs to Rutt's girlfriend, he found 1.65 grams of black tar heroin next to the driver's seat, and used syringes. The gun had been stolen from an unlocked car in the Carmel Views area in July, and a cell phone in the car had been taken during a theft in Monterey. The car also contained a lot of other items that appeared to have been stolen.

Smith managed to get Rutt calmed down and was waiting for other deputies to arrive when something rolled off the hood of the car, where Smith had deposited the contents of Rutt's pockets. "That's when he seized the moment to run," Smith said.

The fleeing criminal managed to get out of sight, and his disappearance sparked a search effort that drew two K-9s and help from officers from Marina, Presidio of Monterey, City of Monterey, and California Highway Patrol, and several more deputies. They set up a perimeter, and one of the sheriff's department's dogs found Rutt hiding in some bushes not far away.

"The dogs missed him in the first pass, but on the second, one of them picked him up," Smith said.

Deputies arrested Rutt and took him to Monterey County Jail, where he remains on $70,000 bail for several felonies, including possession of a controlled substance while armed, burglary, possession of stolen property, and having a gun.

"So far, I've been able to link nine cases to him,"

Smith told The Pine Cone Wednesday night. "I have video of him in the same car I caught him in," driving up to a house in Carmel Highlands, where he is suspected of stealing tools from the garage on Aug. 17.

In the case of the gun, the owner "had just gotten back from the range, and he was tired," Smith said, so he inadvertently left the handgun in his unlocked car. It was stolen July 3.

Rutt is suspected of committing several residential and vehicle burglaries in Aptos in late August, and of stealing from unlocked cars in Monterey.

"And the big case was he had a lot of stolen property from a commercial burglary in Upper Ragsdale," Smith said. In that incident, which occurred Aug. 31, Rutt allegedly broke into a doctor's office and stole the safe, all the prescription pads, and other valuable items.

Smith said Rutt committed all these crimes while on "post release community supervision," one of the programs created by voters easing penalties for "non-violent" criminals like Rutt. Under Prop. 47, such convicts only serve a third of their sentences, which is why he was already out of North Kern State Prison.

But now, he's in county jail. Rutt pleaded not guilty Sept. 6, and a preliminary hearing set for Thursday was delayed until October.

Woman arrested after high-speed chase

By MARY SCHLEY

A 23-YEAR-OLD woman wanted in Santa Barbara County for allegedly stealing a truck and leading police on a chase in 2014 tangled with authorities again earlier this month, and even attempted to run over one of them, Monterey County Sheriff's Deputy Mike Smith told The Pine Cone Wednesday. But authorities finally managed to capture Ricki Lee Warren in Moss Landing.

"A few months ago, she got away from two of our deputies trying to serve an arrest warrant" for the crimes in Santa Barbara. In that incident, she was eventually tracked down by a K-9 and arrested on a beach in Gaviota, but failed to show up in court after being released.

Local officers have been keeping an eye out for her ever since, hoping for another chance take her into custody, Smith said, and they got that chance Sept. 2, when she visited her grandfather on Schulte Road in Carmel Valley.

When a sheriff's deputy saw a car in the driveway he suspected she was driving, he tried to block it in, but as he walked toward the house, she jumped in and managed to drive away. "And when she was peeling away, she nearly hit him," Smith said.

The deputy, Blaine Councilman, initially gave chase, but as Warren hit speeds of 90 mph on Carmel Valley Road in the stolen BMW, he "wisely terminated the pursuit,"

City sticks with $101K fee for Dolores parking spaces

■ Construction will keep them blocked off for 18 months

By MARY SCHLEY

TO PROTECT passersby from debris, and to give construction crews space for storing materials and equipment, a temporary fence has been placed around the building being demolished at Dolores and Fifth, and on Tuesday, the city council decided the fencing — which blocks off six parking spaces — can remain for as long as the project takes. But while contractor Dan Silverie argued that the city's $31-per-space-per-day fee should be reduced by at least half, the council voted to impose the full amount.

With the demolition and subsequent construction of a modern-style, two-level complex with retail, living space and underground parking set to take at least 18 months, the tab will be $101,742.

"I have been a part of five downtown projects that have required an encroachment permit and have also needed to take up the temporary use of parking spaces over a long period of time, and historically, the city has offered the property owners a major discount of 50 percent to 75 percent of the total impact fees from the usual $31-per-day rates," Silverie said. "One of the main reasons for the discount was the length of time that was considered, versus the shorter use of time required by special events and/or by one-day operations that may have needed the space for other reasons."

He said he felt this project deserves "the same historic opportunities, considering the amount of funding that will also be paid by the property owners for other fees related to the cost of permits," and because the project includes rebuilding the city's sidewalks and improving underground utilities in the area.

"If we don't have that barrier, there will be cars parked there, and if people open their doors and think they're stepping onto a sidewalk," it could be dangerous, Silverie told the council at the Sept. 12 meeting. "We need that barrier to protect the public's safety. It's a busy corner."

Making exceptions?

Planning director Marc Wiener recommended council members authorize the fencing in the public right of way but asked them to discuss the fees. The parking fee is usually charged to contractors who use the spaces for vehicles, and he asked the council to "consider whether the rate of the parking stall fee should apply to a situation in which the construction footprint extends onto city property."

If it shouldn't, the council could give Silverie the discount. But if it should, "then the full fees should be charged."

City administrator Chip Rerig said he and city attorney Glen Mozingo "agree that you apply the laws, and if you don't like them, you change the laws," as opposed to making an exception for a particular case, which would set a precedent.

"Since this is taking out that entire corner for the next 18 months, we really wanted the council to see this one," he added. "There's nothing in the code about storage of equipment vs. vehicles in the public right of way."

Jason Johnson, owner of Le Bijou jewelers across the street, said he and other nearby business operators are con-

Neighbors say deal to turn ranch into parkland will increase wildfire risk

By CHRIS COUNTS

TURNING A large piece of undeveloped private property into open space or parkland in Big Sur seems like a good idea to many people. But in the Palo Colorado area, residents are worried that the purchase of 1,200-acre ranch by a conservation group — and the anticipated transfer of that land to the United States Forest Service — will actually increase the risk of wildfire in their community. And with last summer's Soberanes Fire still fresh in everybody's mind, those residents are launching a petition drive to halt the sale.

Palo Colorado area homeowner Mike Caplin, who lost his house in the Soberanes fire, is spearheading the opposition.

He said if Adler Ranch ends up being designated as parkland or open space, it will become more difficult to open a critical fire break that passes through the property.

"The Bixby Mountain firebreak is the last topographically viable location for a firebreak to stop wildfires that start in Los Padres National Forest from burning through the greater Palo Colorado community," Caplin explained. "The forest service has demonstrated that it cannot be relied upon to open firebreaks in a timely manner during wildfires, or maintain fuelbreaks before wildfires."

Also, if the ranch becomes a park, residents are concerned more people will visit the area, increasing the risk of illegal campfires. Fifty-seven homes in the area were destroyed by the Soberanes Fire, which was started in July 2016 by an illegal campfire.

Once owned by the late Axel Adler, the Adler Ranch is located at end of Palo Colorado Road. The property is now owned by his heirs, who have a contract in place to sell it to the Western Rivers Conservancy, an Oregon-based nonprofit. The sale price is unknown, but the property had been listed for $8 million.

Nonprofit wants to save river, trees

According to the land conservation group, the purchase of the ranch will help protect "the Central Coast's most important spawning stream for threatened south-central coast steelhead" and preserve "some of the southernmost stands of old-growth redwoods on earth."

Perhaps most concerning to locals is the prospect of the ranch attracting more backpackers into the area. The blog post indicates the acquisition "will also allow for the creation of new trails between the ocean and the inland reaches of Los Padres National Forest, a significant enhancement for the many hikers who visit Big Sur from around the world."

Western Rivers Conservancy co-founder and President Sue Doroff said the deal hasn't yet been finalized, but she defended the need to protect the nearby Little Sur River — which she suggested the acquisition will do.

"This is an incredibly important stream, both to the national treasure we know as Big Sur and to a population of wild steelhead trout whose very existence hinges upon on the health of this river," Doroff said. "With both people and wildlife in mind, our goal is to forever protect a crucial mile of the Little Sur River, along with the magnificent redwoods and expansive wildlands that make up the Adler Ranch. Our goal is to convey the ranch to Los Padres National Forest, linking protected public lands on the coast to the main body of Los Padres National Forest inland."

Doroff said she believes public ownership of the ranch will ultimately add fire protection for nearby residents. "Public ownership will also provide greater ease of firefighter access and assured fire line maintenance," she added.

But the president of the nonprofit Fire Safe Council Monterey County, Michael Emmitt, warned the deal makes the commu-

Pot growers renege on deal, lawsuit says, broker sues for $800,000

By KELLY NIX

A MARIJUANA "broker" who claims the owners of a cannabis-growing company backed out of a deal to give him a big chunk of cash for his efforts in finding them a place to grow their weed has filed a lawsuit in Monterey County Superior Court seeking hundreds of thousands of dollars in lost revenue.

In a suit filed Sept. 6, Richard Neale, who describes himself as a "broker of cannabis business transactions," contends he struck an agreement with Harvest Pacific LLC and its managers, David Wallace, Brett Kilgore and Giovanni Silva, to find a greenhouse in Monterey County in which the company could start a growing operation.

In return, Harvest Pacific, which is based in Humboldt County would pay Neale "15 percent of the profits from every harvest — or 'chop,' as the term is known in the industry — throughout the life of the lease, as well as 15 percent of all licensing profits derived under the lease," Neale says.

However, Neale said that in April, after he located a 95,000-square-foot greenhouse complex on Spence Road in Salinas — and Harvest Pacific signed a lease with the leaseholders of the two greenhouses — the company decided it "would not honor" the agreement.

Harvest Pacific acknowledged Neale's "assistance" in locating the property and said it would pay him "for his time," but the company said it would not give him ownership interest in the business, the lawsuit indicates.

"As such, please find this notice to not enter the property," Neale said he was told.

Harvest Pacific "now contends that the [agreement] is not a binding contract and instead was "only intended to be a beginning point to develop conversation for negotiation purposes," Neale alleges.

Neale said that about 10 days before he got the letter from Harvest's attorney, the marijuana growers claimed they could have easily found the greenhouse on their own, but Neale said it took him six months to find it.

The lawsuit — filed for Neale by Salinas attorney David W. Balch — reveals the bountiful profits that can be had from cannabis. "For this first crop alone, [Neale] is rightfully entitled to a sum ranging between $600,000 and $800,000, minus 15 percent of the overall expenses," the lawsuit says.

Big money

Neale said he believes that Harvest Pacific's Spence Road facility is currently harvesting as many as 22,000 plants.

"That translates to roughly 3,000 to 3,500 pounds" of marijuana, he said. "Each marketable pound will be sold for a price ranging from $1,200 to $1,500."

The complaint details the complexities of growing and harvesting commercial marijuana, including rapidly drying cannabis in coastal regions where the marine layer and fog can cause mold and mildew on the plants.

The lawsuit also talks about the cannabis business in the state being a "cash industry," for fear of potential federal prosecution, since marijuana is still illegal per federal law.

"In the plaintiff's case, the all-cash nature of the cannabis industry solidifies the urgent need for court-imposed relief," Neale's lawsuit said.

Monterey County requires that marijuana cultivation be done within an existing warehouse or greenhouse that had a permit before Jan. 1, 2016 — which means that greenhouses are a hot commodity in the county.

Marijuana for medical use is legal in California, and last year, voters approved Prop. 64, making recreational marijuana legal for those 21 and over. Consumers are expected to be able to purchase recreational marijuana sometime in 2018.

WAYNE DALTON

Jan. 26, 1962 — September 9, 2017

Garland Wayne Dalton passed away on Saturday, September 9, 2017 surrounded by his loving family, after a short and valiant battle with lymphoma.

Wayne was born on January 26, 1962 in Danville, Virginia. He lived in Danville and was a member of the Congregational-Christian Church until his father's military service brought his family to California in 1968. After his parents divorced at age 7, Wayne remained in Seaside, California, with his mother, Betty Sue, and his brother, Tony. Betty Sue was a role model for Wayne, always providing for her two boys and ensuring they had all they needed to live joyful, healthy, and productive lives. It was from his mother that Wayne learned the value of commitment, his strong work ethic and his focus on family.

Wayne was an avid student throughout his school years, and an athlete well into college. He attended Fremont Junior High and graduated from Monterey High School. He was a high school "Iron Man," competing in three sports for all four years. During high school and college, Wayne worked for the City of Monterey Recreation Department. He graduated from Fresno State University, a proud Bulldog and an active member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity.

Wayne began his career as Recreation Superintendent for the City of Dinuba in 1986. In 1988, he began his tenure with the City of Monterey as Community Center Director of the Monterey Youth Center. He was then promoted to Administrative Analyst and later to Parking Superintendent in September of 2007. Throughout his career, Wayne built a reputation as a man of character, a trusted colleague and a selfless servant of the public good.

He served on the Board of Directors for the California Public Parking Association (CPPA) for more than nine years, including two terms as president. His fellow CPPA members were more than colleagues to Wayne; he was proud to call them family too.

Wayne was active in his community and in the lives of others. During the late 1980's, Wayne was a member of the Monterey Jaycees. In 2000, Wayne joined the Rotary Club of Seaside, later serving as president for three terms. Wayne coached youth soccer and softball teams; served meals to those in need through a local food program; and lent his time and talents to the Boys & Girls Clubs of Monterey County, the Community Partnership for Youth, and the Gateway Center.

Wayne married Carrie Curatolo in 1990 and together they had two children, Nathaniel (Nate) Wayne and Hailey Frances Dalton. Although his first marriage ended, his children remained the center of his life.

In 2009, Wayne fell in love with Jennifer Ramras Sardina and her three daughters, Gabriella, Natalie, and Kathryn. Wayne loved the "whole package" from day one. Their love grew deeper and stronger over time and in 2013, Wayne and Jennifer decided to join their two families together into one. Together, Wayne and Jennifer built a new life with their five amazing children at the center of it all. While each member of the family had their own unique story, they were bound together by love and the commitment to family shown by Wayne and Jennifer. One of Wayne's proudest life accomplishments was the success of his blended family.

Wayne was loved and admired by those who knew him in every aspect of his life. Wayne was a man of great integrity, wit, and charm. Although quiet by temperament, he made a powerful and lasting impact on the lives he touched. He was an active member of the community and unselfishly gave his time and energy for the benefit of his family, friends, and community.

Wayne was preceded in death by his mother, Betty Sue Weatherford Dalton. He is survived by his wife Jennifer Ramras Dalton; his children Nathaniel and Hailey Dalton, Gabriella, Natalie, and Kathryn Sardina, Rachel Martinez and Nishant Rangrej; and his brother Tony Dalton.

Wayne's family is eternally grateful for the love and care he received from CHOMP, the Garden East nurses and ICU team, especially Diane and Monina, whose care was not only compassionate but exceeded their call of duty. They would also like to acknowledge the extraordinary care of Dr. Jon Kitaji, Dr. Jeffrey Chen, Dr. Stephen Chang, Dr. Richard Garza, Dr. Shinkai Hakimi, Dr. Richard Hell, Dr. Toby Katz, Dr. Zach Koontz, Dr. Marta Zulik, and the Palliative Care team of John Luster and Dharma Naidu. Their passion and dedication to Wayne was inspirational.

A memorial mass in Wayne's honor will be held on Friday, September 15, 2017 at 2 p.m. at the Cathedral of San Carlos Borromeo in Monterey, with a reception immediately following.

In lieu of flowers, the family requests a gift in Wayne's honor to the scholarship fund of the California Iota Chapter of Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity or the Boys & Girls Clubs of Monterey County.

UNDETERRED BY CRITICS, SCULPTOR SET TO UNVEIL TRIBUTE TO WWII SLAVES

By CHRIS COUNTS

WHILE SOME people want controversial statues commemorating historical events to be torn down, a Carmel sculptor is getting ready to unveil one.

Sculptor Steven Whyte's latest piece, titled "Women's Column of Strength," goes on display Friday in San Francisco's St. Mary's Square Park.

The bronze and steel monument, which stands 10 feet high and weighs 900 pounds, pays homage to the hundreds of thousands of "comfort women" from 11 countries who were forced by the Japanese military to become sex slaves during WWII. But it has also riled Japanese officials, who say a 2015 agreement with South Korea — in which Japan apologized and gave more than $8 million to a small number of survivors — provided a "final and irreversible resolution" to the controversy.

Despite continued opposition from Japan, dozens of comfort women memorials have been placed in cities across the world in recent years.

Meanwhile, Whyte said there are only two other statues on permanent public display in San Francisco that feature a woman.

City takes stand

In part to raise awareness about the human trafficking of women and girls throughout the world today, the San Francisco Board of Supervisors unanimously passed a resolution in 2015 to establish the memorial on a public site in the city.

Sculptor Steven Whyte poses with the statues of four women who will be part of a monument he will unveil in San Francisco next week.

The effort to create a memorial was spearheaded by retired San Francisco Superior Court judges Julie Tang and Lillian Sing, who co-chair the nonprofit Comfort Women Justice Coalition. About $250,000 in private funding was raised, and after a lengthy selection process, Whyte was chosen to make the piece.

The monument features three female figures holding hands atop a cylindrical steel base — one Chinese, one Korean and one Filipina — and each aged 12-18. "They stand tall in solidarity next to each other, rising above each tarnished past of innocence lost," Whyte explained.

It also includes an elderly female figure standing nearby. The woman represents a former sex slave. "She looks at the survivors with resilient power reminding all that justice will and ought to have its resolution," said the sculptor, whose previous commissions have honored a wide variety of subjects, including civil rights activist Martin Luther King, football star John David Crow and the mascot of Tufts University, Jumbo the Elephant.

The unveiling comes at a time when activists are calling

EUGENE (PAT) HARNEY

March 18, 1939 ❖ September 11, 2017

Eugene (Pat) Harney was born in Stockton, CA on March 18, 1939. In 1944, he moved to the Monterey Peninsula which he would call home for the rest of his life. Pat was a proud Padre of Carmel High School where he excelled at football and met his wife-to-be Lou Ann before graduating in the class of '58. Shortly after, he and his sweetheart Lou Ann married and began raising a family in Carmel as Pat started his career as a union cabinet maker — carpenter in Monterey. After 40+ years of work he retired to enjoy as much time as possible pursuing his hobbies of hunting and fishing, often with Lou Ann by his side.

Pat was never short on words nor local knowledge, which lead him into countless quality friendships over the years. Later in life, he found a love for gold prospecting in the creeks and beaches of the South Coast which he pursued for as long as he physically could. When he wasn't on the water or in the mountains, he could be found at Carmel High rooting for the football team or at home woodworking, creating various works of metal art, and caring for his cats, dogs, and koi fish.

Pat peacefully passed on September 11, 2017. He was preceded in death by his parents and sister Janice, and is survived by his wife Lou Ann, his sister Susan, his children and their spouses Mike (Denise) and Laurie (Brian), and his five grandchildren and their spouses: Todd (Kristin), Jillian (Matt), Stu, Tiffany, and Max. Memorial donations may be made to the Monterey SPCA or Stand Up To Cancer. A celebration of life will be announced at a later date.

DAVIS JACK FACTOR, JR.

Davis Factor Jr. passed away unexpectedly on September 3, the consequence of an automobile accident.

Born in Los Angeles, Davis was the son of Anne and Davis Factor, Sr. After Davis graduated from USC, a career followed with Max Factor & Co., the legendary company founded by his grandfather in 1909. After leaving the family firm, Davis found his niche in property development.

In the early '80s, Davis relocated to the Monterey Peninsula, where he immersed himself in philanthropic pursuits for more than three decades.

Davis cared deeply about preserving and protecting the Monterey Bay's natural beauty, which he enjoyed at every opportunity. He was an avid birder and active docent at Point Lobos. He served for many years on numerous boards, the most notable of which being the Robert Louis Stevenson School in Pebble Beach for 10 years (1994-2004) and the Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula (Montage). A host of other local organizations were also the beneficiaries of Davis's largesse, stewardship, and diplomacy.

In 2003, Davis was instrumental in the renovation of the Sunset Center for the Performing Arts and received the key to the city. Attending his first performance in the new concert hall, he was thrilled by the beauty of the sound. That year, the Community Foundation for Monterey County honored Davis with its Distinguished Trustee Award. Davis also served on the board of the Bach Festival for many years.

Davis was a visionary benefactor of the Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula. He completed two terms on the board of trustees (2000-2006), one as chairperson and one as vice chair. He also served as chair of the development committee and as a member of the Pavilions Project campaign committee.

Davis is survived by his adoring wife and best friend of 17 years, Christine. He will also live on in the hearts of his sister, Lita Kilpatrick; his nine children: Davis Factor III, Jill Copeland, Daniel, Dean (Shannon), and Emily Factor; Tara (Jim) Hahl; Christopher Jerde and Jennifer (Daniel Castor) Jerde; and Patrick (Michelle) O'Rourke; his 16 grandchildren: Katherine Alcocer; Marisa, Daryn, Aiden and Carly Copeland; Erica Kronen; Seth Piracci, Claire, Alex, Elizabeth, and Katherine Rose Factor; Nell and Gwen Castor; Cody and Sara Hahl, and Simon Davis O'Rourke; and Davis's first great grandson, Voss Kronen.

A celebration of life will be held later in the fall. In lieu of flowers, donations may be made to BirchBark Foundation or Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula (Montage Medical Group).

I thought of you with love today, but that is nothing new
I thought about you yesterday and days before that too,
I think of you in silence, I often speak your name
All I have are memories and your picture in a frame
Your memory is my keepsake with which I'll never part
God has you in His keeping, I have you in my heart.

Cesar Lara, with the Monterey Bay Labor Council and Building Healthy Communities, praised the supervisors for considering the resolution.

“For those in our community who are undocumented, these are fearful times,” Lara said.

Hartnell College student and Dreamer Adriana Gonzalez said Dreamers “often feel like our dreams are about to expire,” so it’s a “great feeling to know that we are supported.”

“A lot of people have the misconception that Dreamers are criminals,” Gonzalez said. “In reality, all we want to do is contribute to our society.”

Second District Supervisor John Phillips said that while he had “some concerns about taking on the federal government,” the DACA question “impacts our community,” and he voted in favor of the resolution.

“These are young people, immigrants, and the type of people who are positive for our community,” Phillips said. “I don’t think it’s right to change the rules in middle of their game, their life, through no fault of their own.”

The only “positive” thing from Trump’s order, he said, is that maybe it will compel Congress to pass immigration reform.

Two men opposed the resolution, with one asking, “If you pass DACA, do their parents stay too?” Panetta told The Pine Cone last week that the question of whether parents would be allowed to remain in the country should be resolved within the larger scope of immigration reform.

In the same interview, Panetta said that he would not support striking a deal to allow those under DACA to stay in exchange for helping fund Trump’s border wall, a proposal floated by Republicans.

Becerra sues Trump

Meanwhile, California State Attorney General Xavier Becerra on Monday announced that the state had filed suit against the Trump administration over the decision, contending it violated federal laws and the Constitution — essentially the same arguments people made when Obama implemented the program.

“We will not permit Donald Trump to destroy the lives of young immigrants who make California and our country stronger,” Becerra said in a statement.

Panetta said he hasn’t yet read the complaint and was unable to say whether the move is the best means to oppose Trump’s order.

He did comment on a Sept. 9 roundtable meeting he had with 30 DACA recipients at Hartnell College in Salinas.

“The Dreamers I met with told me about their families, their lives, and their hard work to be a part of, and positively contribute to, our community,” he said. “Their parents took great risks to bring them here to give them a better life.”

Panetta said the young men and women he met with are aware of their obligation to “give back to the country that gave them so much opportunity.”

“In order to fulfill that responsibility, each Dreamer works hard to succeed in school, and at work, for their families and our community,” he said. “I will continue to share with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle what I learned to show them why Congress needs to pass a long-term solution.”

Panetta said most of the people he’s spoken to have praised his position on DACA. However, the majority of the roughly 200 people who commented on his Facebook page since last weekend’s roundtable opposed his position on the program.

dogs, Sparky and Marci, also died in the collision.

While his family's name is on a wing at Cedars Sinai Medical Center in Los Angeles, and his grandfather is mentioned in the song, "Hooray for Hollywood" ("But if you think that you can be an actor, see Mr. Factor/He'll make a monkey look good/Within a half an hour you'll look like Tyrone Power/Hooray for Hollywood..."), Davis Factor made his own strong impressions here, devoting considerable time, energy and resources — including furniture — to Sunset Center, Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula, and Robert Louis Stevenson School.

Born in Los Angeles in 1935 to Anne and Davis Factor Sr., he graduated from USC and went to work for the family business, Max Factor & Co., that his grandfather founded in 1909, and which the family sold in 1972. After leaving the company, Factor pursued a career in property development.

Seeking "a slower pace and more natural environment, away from the chaos of Los Angeles," his daughter said, Factor and his family moved to the Monterey Peninsula in the early 1980s, and he soon became heavily involved in the philanthropic pursuits that would retain his interest and dedication for the next three decades.

Even the furniture

Former Mayor Sue McCloud recalled Factor's help with the extensive remodel of the historic Sunset Center — an effort that earned him a key to the city, his family said.

"He attended countless performances upon moving to Carmel and was a devoted lover of classical and jazz music," Emily Factor said. "He strongly believed in the power music has in bringing together and supporting a community. By helping spearhead fundraising for the restoration of the center, it would bring even more opportunity for both great performance and an appreciative, adoring audience in the County of Monterey."

He also served on the board of the Bach Festival for many years, and McCloud said former conductor Bruno Weil would stay with him when the fest was in town.

"Bruno was a very close friend of Davis', and when he was here, he would spend quite a bit of time at the Factors' and would stay in the TV room," she said. After the remodel, Factor donated the furniture from that room to be placed in the conductor's room, "so Bruno would feel comfortable there." Two large and valuable rugs were also offered as gifts from Factor.

"So not only was there gifting of his time and effort, but of material goods," she said.

While numerous local charities were "the beneficiaries of Davis' largesse, stewardship and diplomacy," according to his family, those that received the greatest attention were Stevenson School in Pebble Beach, where he served as board chairman for a decade, and the board of Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula, where he spent three years as chairman and three years as vice chairman. "A three-time cancer survivor, Davis' interest in community healthcare promulgated his keen interest in helping to develop a world-class hospital in the Monterey Peninsula," Emily Factor said.

A great admirer of the area's natural beauty, and an avid birder, Factor was also a docent at Point Lobos State Reserve.

Factor, who was married three times, had nine children and step-children, and 16 grandchildren.

"He truly was a pillar of strength, through sadness or illness, he always made it through with his head held high, an example for all of us," Emily said. "He always had a way of making a joke, whether it be noticed or not — he was notorious for his very dry sarcasm — even in the hardest of times."

fact, as far as I'm concerned, you're the only attorney." He recalled fighting alongside Freeman over water issues and other municipal matters. "And sometimes we won, and sometimes not."

Ken White, mayor from 1992 to 2000, said Freeman was key in many major city undertakings. The $21.65 million renovation of Sunset Center came about in large part because of his ability to negotiate with Bill and Nancy Doolittle's private fundraising group. "Don gave us a lot of great, positive, calm information and leadership in doing that agreement," he said. "It paid off."

White and several other speakers at the Sept. 12 meeting also noted Freeman's defense of the city's ban on short-term rentals up to the U.S. Supreme Court. "Don kept leading us through with good advice the whole time," he said. Turning to Freeman, he added, "You gave us a lot of good help and advice, you kept us out of trouble, and saved us an awful lot of time and energy, and we appreciate it very much."

Mayor Sue McCloud, 2000 to 2012, shared some little known facts about Freeman, like that he has pet rabbits, is an "inveterate traveler" who doesn't make reservations, and collects Carmel memorabilia.

"I was glad to be on your side of the table," McCloud added.

Dallas read a statement from Jason Burnett, mayor from 2012 to 2016, who noted, "His retirement will be a huge loss of institutional memory for the community."

Paula Hazdovac, who was on the council a record 18 years, said it was a pleasure to work with Freeman through all the ups and downs of city business. "I have a lot of close friends from when I was here with the city, and I know you do, too," she said. "I appreciate everything that you did."

Assemblyman Mark Stone and State Sen. Bill Monning sent a proclamation Freeman's "indelible mark of excellency," his "tireless hard work and unwavering commitment," and his "impressive record of career and civic achievements."

"You're such a good sport to let us do this tonight," councilwoman Carolyn Hardy told Freeman, to which he replied, "I was planning on not doing it."

She read a note from Doug Schmitz praising Freeman's legal and investigative skills. "Nobody in Carmel-by-the-Sea had as many sources of information as Don Freeman," Schmitz noted, because friends and foes were comfortable talking to him.

Mozingo ribbed Freeman a bit, noting that the first ordinance he signed as city attorney protected dinosaurs on Ocean Avenue. "Don, I realize I've got some big shoes to fill here," he said. "You've set a wonderful example I hope to follow."

"I cannot thank you enough for all you have done for this community," Dallas said.

"This is a really humbling experience," said Freeman. He said he loved working for Carmel and couldn't have done the job without the help of the mayors, councils and others. "The most special thing about Carmel is not the beach, not the urban forest, not the historical buildings — it's really the people and the sense of community," he said. "And I hope the people who live and work here continue with that in perpetuity."

cerned about the construction's impacts on their livelihoods.

"Especially the dust, which has already started," he said.

He requested signs in the area encouraging people to visit their shops and restaurants, since people are being dissuaded by the "sidewalk closed" sign posted at Sixth Avenue, and said the loss of six parking spaces nearby is a problem, too.

"We've all been there a long time, and it's been a tough economy," he said.

Council members sympathized with Johnson and said Silverie should add screening to reduce the dust.

They also said he shouldn't get a discount on the per-day parking fees, which go into a fund that's meant to fund "public parking in or near the business district," but which is rarely, if ever, used. (A city official said this week that the fund balance is $700,000, and hasn't been touched in at least 10 years.)

"Reserving these spaces is a cost of doing business, and whether you use that space for staging or parking a truck makes no difference to me," councilwoman Carolyn Hardy said. "You're still taking that spot away from the public."

Hardy also said Wiener didn't mention any other projects that have received discounts, as Silverie contended. She suggested he and his crew instead control their costs by working hard to reduce the number of spaces they need to block, and for how long.

Councilman Bobby Richards agreed.

"I feel it's difficult to waive a fee like this, because if we have a rule, we should stick with that rule and not change it for a particular project," he said. "We need to stay consistent."

But, he said, if the council wants to revisit the rules, perhaps to encourage businesses to improve their appearances, he's "more than happy to do that."

"This is a great project. However, it's going to be a long project, it's going to negatively impact the community for at least 18 months, and it's at a very busy corner that everybody in the community goes to," councilwoman Carrie Theis said. "I think the way to incentivize them is to keep the fees. Maybe they don't have to use all the spaces for 18 months."

The council voted to allow Silverie and the property owners to have the fencing in the public right of way, but not to extend any discounts.

that honor historical figures with links to slavery — and many have been removed or vandalized as a result.

But nearly all those statues depict powerful men bearing weapons, and certainly not helpless women who have suffered a terrible injustice. “There is currently a really important discussion taking place not just in the United States, but globally, about who we choose to venerate through public art and the impact that these choices have on a community,” Whyte explained.

Despite the seemingly good intentions of those who commissioned the piece, the sculptor has received more than 1,000 angry emails about the monument. But he defended the project and his work on it.

“We have all heard the phrase that history is written by the victors,” added Whyte, who plans to attend Friday’s ceremony in San Francisco, along with local dignitaries and one of the women who inspired the statue. “We know that this can lead to mistruths and to a history that is myopic, unbalanced and incorrect. I think as a society we are just beginning to really learn these lessons, and we as artists have an important role to play in making sure these lessons are reflected in the way we change the landscape of our communities.”

CELEBRATING 20 YEARS OF BEACHCOMBING — FOR SCIENCE

By ELAINE HESSER

FAIR WARNING: this story may not pair well with your scone from Carmel Bakery. It sounds innocuous — volunteers strolling the beaches to collect information on wildlife — until you get close enough to see what information they're collecting.

They're tallying dead animals and trying to help researchers figure out how they died. The group is called BeachCOMBERS. The lengthy acronym stands for Coastal Ocean Mammal and Bird Education and Research Surveys.

It's turning 20 this year, and Andrew DeVogelaere, a co-founder of the organization who works as the research coordinator at Monterey Bay National Marine Sanctuary, thinks that's a "pretty big deal." He, along with James Harvey — director of the Moss Landing Marine Laboratories — started the all-volunteer group in 1997 to "have an idea of the health of Monterey Bay in an inexpensive way."

The volunteers, who DeVogelaere calls "citizen-scientists," receive a weekend of training and then tag along with more experienced beachcombers. They learn to identify dozens of species of fish, mammals and birds, including being able to determine the sex of many of them, as well as learning how to collect specimens for scientific research.

It's a collaborative project between Moss Landing Marine Laboratories, Monterey Bay National Marine Sanctuary, the California Department of Fish and Wildlife and U.S. Geological Survey, among others. The 90 volunteers set out because it was so unsafe.

Smith then recalled that a former boyfriend of hers lives in Moss Landing, so he advised officers in the area to keep an eye out, and "that's where they found her."

Warren remained in Monterey County Jail Thursday on charges of attempted murder, vehicle theft and evading police, and an old Monterey County misdemeanor warrant for possession of narcotics.

Within the organization, Ryan and Megan spent endless time together attending meetings and facilitating events to perpetuate the organization, where inevitably, their love for each other blossomed. After graduate school, they moved to the next chapter of their lives in Irvine, CA where Ryan attended medical school at The University of California – Irvine and Megan began her career at Liberty Mutual Insurance. 2015 they relocated to Sacramento, CA where Ryan could complete his residency program, and is now a 3rd Year Resident Physician Psychiatrist at The University of California– Davis in the Department of Psychiatry and Behavioral Sciences. In the future, the bride and groom are planning to grow their family to include 1 dog, 2 children, and live happily ever after in a Carmel-by-the-Sea house.

the first week of each month on their grisly tours, each with an assigned beach.

"It's not for everybody," DeVogelaere said, somewhat wryly. When workers find the carcasses, they tally them on a sheet the group provides. Since some animals take longer to reunite with the earth than others, the volunteer will then either clip a toenail off, if it's a bird, or tie a piece of hemp around a flipper or other body part to ensure the animal is not counted again the next month.

If a scientist needs specimens for a specific project, volunteers take the relevant part of the animal, or in some cases the whole critter, and leave it in the refrigerator at Moss Landing Marine Labs.

The carcasses, if not needed for research, are left on the beach. "They're part of nature," said DeVogelaere, noting that sometimes they are eaten by vultures or foxes, and then the insects move into what's left.

Beaches from Año Nuevo, north of Santa Cruz, to Cambria are covered, and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service expanded the program into 13 additional beaches from Morro Bay to Los Angeles in 2013.

Surveys focus on both human-induced and natural causes of death, like predators or algae blooms. Sometimes specific reasons behind die-offs are not immediately obvious, as in the case of oil-covered birds that kept washing up on beaches after storms. When samples were tested, scientists found that it was an old type of oil that they could trace to a sunken ship near San Francisco.

Every time the waters got stormy, the boat rocked from side to side, leaking oil from its interior into the water. There was a happy ending — the Coast Guard was able to pump most of it out.

Fishing line and net entanglements can also cause problems.

"When we first started out, we found thousands of common murrelets (a species of bird) dead on beaches," DeVogelaere said. They wondered why it was just that species, and eventually discovered that they were deeper divers than other seabirds, and were getting caught in nets that were set for deep-water fish — specifically, halibut. Fishing practices were changed, and the murrelets were safe once more.

The organization is funded primarily by grants from non-profits and private foundations, along with a small amount of taxpayer money, according to DeVogelaere. The money is mostly used for data entry and for equipment for the volunteers.

The information is used by scientists at all of the agencies that collaborate on the project, as well as fishery management agencies and others interested in the health of the denizens of the seashore.

So the next time you're strolling on Scenic, and see someone in the distance with a clipboard, bending over something in the sand ... you probably want to just keep strolling.

Jazz festival turns 60, welcomes stars, marks milestones and celebrates family

The same year, three of its greatest luminaries were born: Dizzy Gillespie, Ella Fitzgerald and Thelonius Monk. “With so many anniversaries, the celebration feels like it’s bigger than usual,” the jazz festival’s Timothy Orr told The Pine Cone.

This year’s gathering is also a family affair — for the first time in its history, a father and son, John and Gerald Clayton of the Clayton-Hamilton Jazz Orchestra, have been named artists-in-residence for the festival.

And that’s not all — pianist Luca Mendoza will play at the festival with the Crossroads School Jazz “A” Band, while 60th annual Monterey Jazz Festival kicks off Friday, Sept. 15. The festival will also mark the centennial of one of jazz’s biggest milestones — the first jazz record was made in 1917.

GLASS ARTISTS MAKE PUMPKINS FOR A GOOD CAUSE

AFTER SEVEN years in New York City pursuing his career as a glass artist, Nick Leonoff has returned to Carmel Valley to live — and Saturday and Sunday, Sept. 16-17, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., he’ll be displaying his latest creations at MEarth’s annual fundraising Glass Pumpkin Patch.

Participating artists also include Kevin Chong, Nancy Francioli and Todd Moore.

Despite living in the Big Apple, Leonoff came up with the idea for the first local Glass Pumpkin Patch five years ago, and he’s traveled west to be at the show each year since.

“I saw what great fundraisers they were they were in the San Francisco Bay Area, and I thought, ‘We need to have one here in our community,’” Leonoff told The Pine Cone.

This year’s sale will have at least 1,500 glass pumpkins on display — because that’s how many Leonoff is bringing.

The artist is thrilled to participate in the fundraiser — in part because he supports MEarth’s mission of providing hands-on environmental learning opportunities. “It’s a great way to give back to the community,” he said.

The Glass Pumpkin Patch has drawn more people each year, and Leonoff is hopeful it will continue to get bigger and better. “It’s become a destination event,” he explained.

While life in the New York City was certainly exciting, Leonoff is happy to return to Carmel Valley Village, where his studio is located. “It was a great way for me to cut my teeth in the art world, but it’s great to be back in a place I can call home,” he added.

Besides glass pumpkins and small bites from local restaurants, the event will include musical performances by The Gil Cadilli Trio (jazz, Saturday at 10 a.m.); Valley Soul (rock, Saturday at 12:15 p.m.); mandolinist Dave Holodiloff (bluegrass, Saturday at 2:30 p.m.); singer-songwriter Vincent Randazzo (Sunday at 10 a.m.); guitarist Robert McNamara (fingerstyle, Sunday at 12:15 p.m.); and Mother Tongue (rock, Sunday at 2:30 p.m.).

The event is free, and proceeds benefit MEarth’s environmental education programs. The “pumpkin patch” will be

FOOD & WINE

Big Sur Food & Wine is a go, Small Bites for Big Hunger, and a bee dinner

‘I’M PRETTY darned excited,’ Big Sur Food & Wine President Aengus Wagner said as tickets went on sale Sept. 4 for this year’s Big Sur Food & Wine festival, set for Nov. 2-year’s festival looked like it might face a similar fate after winter storms wreaked havoc on the coast, leaving large stretches of Highway 1 closed.

Regardless of last year’s fires, Wagner and his cohorts managed to stage the festival in true fashion, with its signature elements, like Magical Mystery Tours, Hiking with Stemware, the Pinot Walkabout, the Sommelier Dinner, and Wine & Swine.

“I felt like we put on a really amazing festival, we made some money, and got our bills paid, and gave to charity,” he said. “We felt like we had a chance to get everything going for this year.”

But then, the storms hit. Big Sur residents tend to be undaunted, though, and Wagner said the lineup for this year’s fest is strong, starting with a first: Opening Night at the Ventana Inn. In previous years, opening night took place at the Highlands Inn, but this year’s party will showcase a Big Sur property that’s been closed for an $18 million remodel. Wagner said he believes the hotel’s management “will be more involved with the community than they have been,” and hosting Opening Night will also serve as “their coming-out party, so to speak.”

The Post Ranch Inn, which has hosted aspects of the fest at various levels since its start, is upping its participation, too, according to Wagner. “They’re open and really excited to be part of an event that will be one of the first celebrations after the bridge opens," he said.

As for the Pfeiffer Canyon Bridge, which was originally set to reopen this month, Wagner said organizers and participants will figure out how to deal with it if it still can't be crossed by early November. But he's not really worried.

"Basically, we have a four-plus-week buffer between the anticipated opening and our event," he said.

The closure has presented its challenges, though, as some of the key members of the group live south of it, while others are north. "The hardest thing, logistically, has been to get our committee together," he said.

And if the bridge doesn't open on time, the logistics of delivering the ingredients to the restaurants south of the bridge might be tricky, and having to hike in would weed out some people who would otherwise attend, but, Wagner said, "The people who would make it would be some of the coolest people to hang out with."

In addition to the signature events, plans include a seminar showcasing American sparkling wines, and dinner for a dozen people at Sierra Mar at the Post Ranch Inn. Larry Stone, the "godfather of Sommeliers in America," as Wagner called him, will be there to talk about wine.

"It's amazing to have him ask to come, to have him rearrange travel plans, to learn what we're about, and donate time and product because he has an affection for Carmel and Big Sur," he said. "He's one of the heroes."

The event raises money for Big Sur charities, and this year will help fund the Upper Rocky Creek Road slide repair efforts in Palo Colorado, the Big Sur Fire Brigade, and the Big Sur Relief Fund.

■ Italian summer at HGK

A week before summer officially ends, Happy Girl Kitchen in Pacific Grove will hold a workshop, Italian Summer Cooking, Sept. 15 from 5 to 8 p.m., for $95 per person.

"This workshop is offered during the height of our summer produce season. We are so fortunate to be in an area that enjoys an abundance of organic farms growing a variety of produce that is outstanding in flavor and quality," the shop's owners said in their announcement.

The chef and kitchen manager will share recipes highlighting the flavors of Italy and capitalizing on Central Coast produce. Included in the evening's lesson plan are fresh ricotta and herbs with juicy tomatoes, simple handmade pasta, and Tuscan cannellini beans salad with roasted vegetables. Students will finish out the session with rustic fresh fruit crostata.

Then, everyone will sit down together to enjoy the evening's dishes. Participants are invited to bring their own wine for the workshop or to enjoy during dinner — or both. To see if any spots are still available, call (831) 373-4475 or visit www.happygirlkitchen.com. Happy Girl is located at 173 Central Ave. in Pacific Grove.

■ Art and wine for BirchBark

The BirchBark Foundation, which helps pet owners cover their veterinary bills, will benefit from Art and Wine on the Mountain Sept. 16 from 3 to 6 p.m. at a private home and horse ranch in Watsonville.

The afternoon event will include gourmet appetizers and fine wines, a pair of musicians, a silent auction, and a sale of works by professional local artists, including Alena Byrnes, Katell Le Bourdonnec, Jeannine Calcagno and Dorina Hoffer. Montagne Russe winery will release its special BirchBark-labeled Pinot Noir, with $10 from each bottle sold going to the foundation.

Dr. Merrienne Burtch, the nonprofit's founder, will talk about BirchBark's mission to save lives during veterinary emergencies when owners are unable to pay for treatment for their furry family members.

Donors to BirchBark are admitted free and can get their tickets by emailing merrienne@birchbarkfoundation.org, while members of the public can pay $50 per person. Tickets are available at www.birchbarkfoundation.org/purchase-tickets. The address will be provided after purchase. No dogs will be allowed.

■ Bee educated

With his Carmel Plaza store up and running, and his many beehives humming, Carmel Honey Co. founder Jake Reisdorf, 14, has plenty to keep him busy. But he'll take a little time to talk about his favorite insect during a Bee Education Dinner Sept. 21 at the Beach House at Lovers Point, which has a few of Reisdorf's hives and uses their honey in creative cocktails and cuisine.

For the evening, executive chef Matthew Farmer will create a three-course dinner, starting with appetizers at 6 p.m., and each item will incorporate honey in some way.

Dinner will begin at 6:30 p.m., and Reisdorf will talk about bees and their importance to the environment. Guests will also receive honey sticks and recipes to take home.

The cost is $69 per person, including tax and tip, and the Beach House is located at 620 Ocean View in Pacific Grove. Call (831) 375-2345 or order tickets through Eventbrite.com.

"In the way they clash and penetrate each other, there is the source of everything," Volkov said. "Whether I paint a landscape, a still-life or a portrait, within it there is always a story of light traveling through darkness."

Gallerie Amsterdam is located on Dolores between Fifth and Sixth. Call (831) 624-4355.

his father, Vince Mendoza, will direct a performance by the USC Thornton Jazz Composers Collective.

And pianist Eddie Mendenhall and his daughter, bassist Kanoa Mendenhall, will take the stage with Andy Weis & The Monterey All-Stars. "It feels like a family reunion," Orr said.

Besides recalling jazz's illustrious past and showcasing some of its brightest contemporary stars, the three-day festival will include provide a stage for more than 500 musicians and 100 performances.

■ A trio of legends ... and a tribute

As a key player of Miles Davis' legendary quintet in the mid-1960s, and on his own records, Hancock created music that was both innovative and accessible as he helped pioneer the post-bop sound in jazz. The 14-time Grammy Award-winning pianist plays on the Jimmy Lyons Stage Friday at 10:10 p.m., and he'll join another pianist, Correa, on the same stage Sunday at 9:40 p.m.

The winner of 22 Grammy Awards, Correa replaced Hancock in Davis' quintet and is credited with helping to fuse rock and funk with jazz.

Considered by many to be jazz's greatest living instrumentalist, Marsalis has crossed musical boundaries with ease throughout his career, even performing with the Grateful Dead. The saxophonist, along with an all-star ensemble that also includes Jimmy Heath and Joshua Redman, will pay tribute to Sonny Rollins Saturday at 10:20 p.m. on the Jimmy Lyons Stage.

The Rollins tribute honors a musician who played a key role in making the festival a success. The saxophonist, who turned 87 last week, no longer performs live. But he played at the first Monterey Jazz Festival in 1958, and he performed at the festival's 40th and 50th anniversary celebrations.

"With his blessing, we put this tribute together," Orr added. "It doesn't seem the same without him here."

Ticket packages range from $50 for a daily grounds pass to $660 for a three-day all-event pass. For more details, visit www.montereyjazzfestival.org.

■ Rimes, Fleet Foxes at Golden State

The jazz festival isn't the only live music worth getting excited over this week — Golden State Theater in Monterey serves up a trio of shows by big name artists, including country singer Leann Rimes (Sept. 15), The Fleet Foxes (Sept. 19) and singer-songwriter Aaron Lewis (Sept. 20).

Rimes is best known for bursting on the country scene at 13 and scoring a No. 1 country hit with Billy Mack's "Blue." Remarkably, the song was recorded when she was just 11. "My label wanted me to re-record the song when I was 13, but they messed up and put out the original version I recorded when I was 11," Rimes told The Pine Cone.

The success of "Blue" not only landed Rimes on the top of the charts, but earned her comparisons with country music great Patsy Cline.

"I joke that there's a spiritual connection between us," said Rimes of Cline, who died two decades before she was born. "She knew how to feel, and she really brought it through her music. She's still a huge part of my life — I'm still as moved by her voice as I was when I was 5."

Since her first hit, Rimes has landed 42 singles on the Billboard charts, starred on television and in film, written four books and helped raise millions of dollars for charity.

Show time is 8 p.m. Tickets are $42 to $75. The theater is located at 417 Alvarado St. Call (831) 649-1070 or visit www.goldenstatetheatre.org.

With Rancho Cañada closed, CHS golfers find new home for 2017 season

YEAH, SURE, home is where the heart is. Try telling that to members of the Carmel High girls golf team, who were heartbroken to learn earlier this year that their home course was destined to be converted to parkland.

Rancho Cañada Golf Club, which officially closed in January, not only was the headquarters of the Padres — both boys and girls — but also the home course of their feeder program at Carmel Middle School, where about 40 happy kids play golf. Middle school golf coach Travis McCabe was Rancho's head pro.

Peninsula Sports

By DENNIS TAYLOR

"It was a huge concern when I heard Rancho was closing," said Ross Kroeker, who coaches both the girls and boys teams at Carmel High. "The fact that the middle-school kids could literally walk to their golf course was a big part of the success of that program."

Fortunately, Quail Lodge generously stepped up to fill the void, providing the local kids with a first-rate base for practice and home matches.

"It's awesome as a home course," said Kroeker, who, as an instructor at Pebble Beach Golf Academy, knows a good golf venue when he sees one. "We usually play the front nine, which was renovated a couple of years ago and is in fantastic shape, and it's relatively flat, so it's ideal for high school golf."

A chance to compete

Kroeker's girls aren't altogether unfamiliar with insecurity. The school's first female golf squad was christened at the beginning of the 2015-2016 school year, pretty much at the 11th hour when another school in the Monterey Bay League's Pacific Division couldn't field a team.

Until that moment, Carmel girls were allowed on the boys team (Kroeker instituted a new policy: No roster cuts), but had to play from the guys' tees.

"Eliminating roster cuts made the difference, because girls got to compete on the (boys) junior varsity," said Kroeker, who is assisted by Donel Geisen, a former Carmel High golfer (Class of '63). "So when the opportunity to start a girls team popped up, we had players who had experienced competition and knew the rules."

Turns out, they also could play a little. Carmel's inaugural girls squad won the Pacific Division (the lower tier of the Monterey Bay League), which earned the Padres a bump upstairs to the Gabilan Division for the 2016 school year.

"Last year we were tied for first place with Stevenson and Catalina (after head-to-head dual meets) going into the league-championship tournament," Kroeker said. "We finished third in the tournament, which was a little disappointing, but it was still a great season."

Two Padres who earned All-Pacific honors two years ago, senior Emily Tenneson and junior Priscilla Caballero, figure to be key players again this year. Tenneson and another varsity veteran, sophomore Brenna Ozel, were second-team All-Gabilan last year. Ozel and Lauren Pritchard are year-round tournament players.

A history in big tournaments

But the top player on the team is expected to be junior Lauren Hickam, who moved to Carmel from Nevada, where she was a first-team all-league performer and placed 13th in the state tournament.

"Lauren is very competitive, and she's played in a lot of big tournaments," Kroeker said. "She's our longest hitter, she has a solid all-around game, and she's mentally tough."

Junior Karena Fife, a second-year varsity player, is another steady shot-maker with a strong short game.

Sophomore Juliana Cardinale (a softball standout), and freshmen Sky Cordingly and Katie Roy are developing players for the Padres.

But there's also plenty of reason for optimism at Santa Catalina (which won the 2016 league tournament) and Stevenson, both of which are stacked with returning talent.

Catalina will be led once again by league medalist Coco Chai, a senior who finished in a five-way for first place at the Central Coast Section tournament. Three other players were underclassmen last year, including league runner-up Grace Deakyne, who is only a sophomore.

Stevenson's Antonia Malate, league medalist two years ago and runner-up last season, is back for her fourth varsity season. She will be pushed by newcomer Michelle Xu, a tournament veteran who was ineligible last year after transferring late. Three other Pirates from the 2016 title squad also were underclassmen.

Stevenson takes on Catalina on Tuesday and Carmel on Thursday, both times on the road. On Tuesday of this week, Chai (43), Deakyne (45), and Emma Leamey (47) paced Santa Catalina to a 10-stroke victory over Carmel. Hickam (45) and Ozel (47) led the Padres.

Salerno book signing set

SAM SALERNO, longtime Carmel radio personality, has been released from CHOMP, where he was recovering from a stroke, and will be signing copies of his new autobiography, "Sam The Morning Man," from 2 to 4 p.m. Sept. 16 at Carmel Hills Care Center, 23795 Holman Highway.

Salerno, 90, suffered the stroke on June 16 and has since undergone almost two months of therapy.

"Sam The Morning Man" covers Salerno's life in broadcasting and entertainment, golf, including interviewing big celebrities. He owned KRML FM from 1968 to 1977 (during the production of Clint Eastwood's 1971 film, "Play Misty For Me," which used the station for many of its scenes). For the past 14 years, he's been a co-host (with David Marzetti) of "The Shagbag Show," a radio program that airs at 9 a.m. Saturdays on radio stations 1460 AM and 101 FM.

"Sam The Morning Man" is available at Pilgrim's Way (Dolores St., between Fifth and Sixth), and at Old Capitol Books (559 Tyler St., Monterey) and on amazon.com.

Editorial

It doesn't always have to be civil war

THE COMMENT was as succinct as they come. Gesturing to the United States Capitol on a recent afternoon, a former congressman said, "The problem with this place is it's always the Red Team against the Blue Team."

Party loyalty has gotten so pervasive, he continued, that "nobody's willing to compromise, and that's why nothing gets done."

While his comment is overwhelmingly true in Washington, and just seems to get worse every day, it also applied to Carmel not too long ago.

In this town's case, it always used to be the residents against the businesses, or the no-growthers and preservationists against the developers, or the CRA vs. the chamber of commerce. Or whatever factions you care to name.

One group, the other usually alleged, was trying to destroy the town. And vice versa.

Of course, neither accusation was true, any more than it's true that either the Democrats or the Republicans have all the right answers. Everybody wanted to keep the city's charm and protect its environment, while also providing an opportunity for businesses to thrive, and to preserve its past while also preparing for the inevitable changes of the future. Where differences arose, they were only a matter of degree. Still, there were times in Carmel's recent history when various people wouldn't be caught dead at the other side's dinner parties.

And then, things started to change. The volume was lowered and emotions were checked.

In particular, as we pointed out in an editorial during the last election season, the old "business vs. residents" saw has been buried. Finally, both sides seem to realize that if you own a shop or a restaurant in town, your success depends on Carmel staying a haven of quaintness and charm. And if you live here, your enjoyment of the town, not to mention your health and safety, depend on the tax revenue generated by the businesses. It's a mutually beneficial relationship.

Instead of engaging in us vs. them provincialism, the grownups in town look for ways for residents and businesses to work together for mutual benefit. And one of those grownups, these last 33 years, has definitely been city attorney Don Freeman.

At this week's council meeting, Freeman was lauded and teased the way you would a beloved and trusted member of your own family. And that's what he was ... someone whose presence was as comforting as a familiar sweater, but whose expertise, accuracy and willingness to listen to both sides were like a digital version of a respected judge.

And when someone like that is in the room, it has a calming effect on even the most partisan competitors — especially people whose passions are greater than their command of facts, and whose arguments wilt when exposed to light. And we all know how many people like that there are in politics.

So, thank you, Don, for helping shepherd Carmel into an era of more cooperative and convivial politics. When people live in paradise, they should go around with smiles on their faces and cooperative spirits in their hearts, and these days, most people actually do.

Letters to the Editor

Beach fire compromise

Dear Editor,

The question of beach fires has gone through many permutations. Now that this one smokeless fire pit has been installed and appears effective, I understand concerned residents have offered to replace the other eight for a real test. Those test results would then be made available for a review of the program in Feb 2018.

Having grown up in town, both my sister and I truly do not recall beach fires on the Fourth of July — fireworks, yes; picnics we took to the beach, yes. Undoubtedly, there were a few beach fires from time to time, but nothing like the 142 on the Fourth in 2015.

A trial with the full complement of smokeless pits seems a solid step forward as a compromise, and I urge the city to accept the offer of the other eight substitutes and install all pits now to really test this alternative before the Feb 2018 review.

'We will miss him'

Dear Editor,

Thank you, Don Freeman, for your 33 years of service as the city attorney. Don was the mentor, guide, conscience, scolding parent and institutional memory for the myriad of mayors and council members whom he served. It was a career of distinction marked by the trust he earned from the many business and resident clients who came to him for assistance. He was always of good humor. He was always ready to meet and talk. He found a way of never taking himself too seriously, ready with a laugh or a comment. As a member of the Charlotte Townsend council who hired Don, I learned that he loved the "idea" and "traditions" of Carmel: the historic past, the ever-changing present and the potential future. Hidden in those many conversations that we shared, I learned that he was a man with a deep and abiding love for the community of individuals who make Carmel-by-the Sea a special place to live. That love of community will be his legacy. We will miss him.

David Maradei, Carmel

'Stop pretending' editorial

Dear Editor,

Climate change and global warming are not pretenses. California's historic drought is real. Houston's historic floods are real. Florida's historic hurricane is real. Dry and wet extreme-weather events are not "contradictory." Their alarming increase in frequency and intensity is hard evidence that near-term climate change is more threatening than previously anticipated.

The resulting strategic challenge for global leaders is how to mitigate an existential catastrophe. In democratic societies, that mobilization requires informing and persuading the public. This is where the media can make a pivotal constructive contribution. Or not.

When the backstory is the best story

WHILE LOOKING for a place to sell her collection of Japanese antiques in 1970, May Waldroup met a man who was selling used books out of the old Thunderbird Barn in Carmel Valley. She fell in love with the barn, and the man said she could take over the rent, throw out the books, and bring in her antiques. But she also fell in love with the books. So, she placed her antiques upstairs and launched the Thunderbird Bookshop.

It was this barn that served as an inspiration, several years later, for the Barnyard Shopping Village, which Waldroup and her husband, John, opened in 1976 on the site of the old Hatton Dairy, Waldroup leased space in the center's barn-style buildings to artists, restaurateurs, retailers and a live theater group. The Thunderbird was the anchor store in the Barnyard and became legendary for its bounty of books and homemade popovers, served warm by the fireplace. It was a destination, a gathering place for locals and guests, and sometimes even a babysitter, as parents and grandparents dropped off their kids, hoping to launch in them a love affair with story and literature. But that's just the public version of Waldroup's biography.

Her personal story is one of an internationally peripatetic upbringing.

Born in Holland to German parents, she spent her childhood years in the Philippines, where her father went to work in 1931. The family followed a year later. Although they became Philippine citizens, the family later returned to Holland, believing it would be neutral territory in the war they saw coming.

Waldroup was in her early teens then, and watched as resources became increasingly spare. Her family got by without running water or electricity, with meager food rations, and only the clothing they had. One by one, the schools closed.

"And yet, the years 1943 to 1945, until Holland was liberated, turned out to be the best years of my life," Waldroup said. "These were the years I learned the most. My mother was frail, and my sister was still studying, so I became the family food provider."

Very few men

During the war years, there were very few men at home in Holland. They'd either been sent to labor camps in Germany or were in hiding, so able children took on adult responsibilities. Once the Germans confiscated all radios, Waldroup and her friends learned to make little crystal radios, so they could listen to the BBC. They learned to make candles. And, they learned to knit,

Most people know May Waldroup as the person who founded the late-but-much-loved Thunderbird Bookstore. Fewer know the harrowing story of her survival in Holland during World War II.

Eleventh year for Authors & Ideas Fest

By JERRY GERVASE

THE PEBBLE Beach Authors & Ideas Festival will bring its stellar lineup of interesting and provocative speakers to Stevenson School Sept. 22-24. If past festivals are any indication, this year's brain trust will once more challenge, entertain, amaze, and stimulate the minds of attendees, as students and adults will be bombarded with big ideas.

The staff of the Pebble Beach Authors & Ideas Festival remains unchanged — in other words, it still consists solely of Jim and Cindy McGillen, who founded the event more than a decade ago. Its purpose is the same, too: To give avid readers a chance to mingle with award-winning authors and speakers in intimate settings.

"We're a good team. We intentionally keep the speakers and attendees to a manageable number. That way we don't need a staff. We can handle things ourselves," Jim McGillen said. "After 11 years, things have settled in to the degree that we have more speakers than slots for them to speak."

This is a complete turnaround from year one, when the McGillens were frantically calling around the country trying to get authors to come here.

"Now authors, agents and publishers call us to get their clients into the program," McGillen said.

Once again, the McGillens will bring in more than 2,000 Monterey County students to Santa Catalina School, where they will hear the same illustrious speakers who will address the adults at Stevenson.

The Monterey County Office of Education superintendent Nancy Kotowski has been stressing anti-bullying throughout the system.

To that end, the McGillens will show the film, "Lizzie," which tells the story of Elizabeth Velasquez, born with a rare congenital disease that prevents her from accumulating any body fat and gaining weight. When she was 17, a video of her was posted on YouTube as the "World's Ugliest Woman." It received 4 million views. Since then, she has continuously spoken out against bullying. Her TED presentation titled, "How Do You Define Yourself," has been viewed more than 54 million times, and the film about her has been shown to thousands of Monterey County students.

"We wanted to have Lizzy here," McGillen said. "But she's just too fragile to be able to travel."

As usual, the McGillens do not emphasize the fame or accomplishments of any of the speakers more than the others.

"We don't want people to buy a ticket just because a couple of famous people are coming. I want them to come for the whole weekend. Besides, if we've learned anything, it's that the authors you've never heard of often turn out to be the most interesting speakers," McGillen said. "Among others, this year we have the world's leading expert on North Korea, and the country's foremost authority on cyber hacking."

The Authors & Ideas Festival is the result of the McGillens wanting to do something for the community because they fell in love with Carmel's bohemian spirit. They decided on the festival, which they modeled on ones they had attended in Sun Valley and Aspen.

A list of speakers, along with ticket information and schedules, appears on the festival website, www.pbaif.com. Stevenson School is located at 3152 Forest Lake Road in Pebble Beach.

BURNS

happened raced to help. Two men, including Barton, talked to Lovera so he'd stay alert. They covered him with a tarp to protect him from the rain, and Jeremy King, an off-duty firefighter, gave him a foil blanket to keep warm.

Burned and paralyzed, Lovera was carried to a campsite nearby. His rescuers covered him with more blankets and a sleeping bag, but he was in shock and was shivering so badly that he was nearly convulsing.

Others rescuers, including Britta Kfir, took care of Aiden and Nadia — a student at Robert Down Elementary School — who had crawled away from the strike area.

"I've never been so proud of my children, who despite severe burns, punctured eardrums and much blood — and in semi-consciousness — dragged themselves to safety," Lovera said.

As he reeled from the blast, Lovera began experiencing acute pain, which he described as feeling like "fire moving across my torso and legs." Still unable to walk, and his feet numb, Lovera — an avid runner who's extraordinarily fit — felt his condition rapidly going downhill.

"I was in severe shock and going into a really dark place," an emotional Lovera recalled. "I was thinking I was going to die."

To bring him back up, the campers caring for Nadia and Aiden positioned the kids' tent directly across from Lovera's tent, a moment he described as "overwhelming"

"As I progressed and got better and warmer, and the shock was dissipating," Lovera said, "the kids could come over and snuggle with me, and that was just the best thing. I progressively got better."

About two hours after being struck, Lovera regained the use of his legs.

Getting help

The Jennie Lakes Wilderness in Sequoia National Forest, at about 9,000 feet above sea level, is rugged and inaccessible by vehicle. From the campsite to the trailhead is a 7-mile hike — too far for the Loveras, in their condition, to have traveled. Though medical attention would be hours away, kind strangers searched for help.

Among them were Royce and Melissa Gibson, who ran from the Jennie Lake campsite to the nearest road at Big Meadows, while another couple made a challenging uphill trek to locate U.S. Forest Service rangers.

Airlifting the three would be the best way to rescue them, but because the dense backcountry didn't offer any place for a chopper to land, it was decided that a CHP helicopter would hoist them up via cable and harness.

Four hours after the lightning strike, the CHP picked up the kids, while a second helicopter retrieved Lovera 20 minutes later. They were flown to Community Regional Medical Center in Fresno, where they were treated.

Lovera had it the worst: about 80 percent of his back was burned. The burns resembled the fractal pattern of lightning, a phenomenon known as a Lichtenberg figure. The skin on one arm was burned off.

"My right elbow is the [most painful], and under my right armpit," he said.

The electrical current entered Nadia's body through her right arm, and Lovera and Aiden's bodies through their left ears. "It almost looks like we were hit by a shotgun," Lovera said of their peppered facial wounds caused from the lightning blast. "From the top of my skull to my eyes to my jawline ... are all these small wounds that had been almost instantly cauterized."

They all have "exit wounds" on their feet where the electricity shot out of them. Lovera said that one of the sandals he'd been wearing at the time was obliterated.

Like Lovera, Aiden also had a ruptured eardrum, while Nadia had a less severe ear injury. (Ruptured eardrums are common in lightning-strike victims.) Both kids, who spent a day in the hospital, suffered burns, but are back in school. After going through a few initial agonizing bandage changes, Lovera, who stayed in the hospital two days, is doing well, and the burns are fading.

A senior research technician for the Monterey Bay Aquarium Research Institute, Lovera said his hearing loss was significant, and he's not sure when he'll return to work.

He credits the "selfless bravery" of those who came to help him for saving his life and those of his children, and said a day hasn't passed without "tears of gratitude."

It will likely be some time, if ever, Lovera said, before his son wants to go camping again, while Nadia is more receptive to the idea.

"The lightning and thunder we had this morning has given the kids only slight pause," Lovera said Wednesday. "They seem unaffected, but I'm not entirely sure. Nadia stayed in tight to me when we walked to school this morning and heard the rumbling. It definitely had me turning my eyes skyward."

nity less safe from wildfires.

"In short, our group is concerned sale of the Adler Ranch to the forest service would increase the threat of wildfires to people, property and resources in surrounding communities," wrote Emmitt in a letter opposing the sale of the ranch.

Many worry the federal government no longer has the manpower or resources to manage more open space or parkland — and the petitioners predict more of the same if the forest service takes over the Adler property. They contend the forest service failed "to open firebreaks on federal land in a timely manner during the Basin Complex Fire," has failed "to construct and maintain the Big Box Fuelbreak as recommended and agreed to," and lacks the staff "to police its land gathering sheep's wool off barbed-wire fences they passed on their bicycles — until their tires were confiscated for their rubber. After that, the wool was collected on foot, with Waldroup spinning it, then knitting socks and gloves for farmers, in exchange for food.

"I also hired myself out to any farmer who would give me little odd jobs and pay me in food," said Waldroup. "Farmers were excused from working in the labor camps in Germany, since the Germans needed all the food the farmers could produce. I quickly learned the skills that farm kids and their parents knew, particularly to take whatever the land had to offer us."

She remembers going out at night to gather wood from the surrounding forest, which was strictly verboten and punishable, she said. "But we needed heat in winter and to cook whatever food we had. We hunted the threshing machines for wheat or rye berries, which we made into flour to bake bread, a long and tedious, but essential, process."

In thinking back on the war years, Waldroup marvels at how families, actually the whole town, worked together, day by day, to survive.

After the war, Waldroup's family returned to the Philippines, where she eventually met John, and they married and raised three children, Michael, Kristen and Marc. From there, they moved to Japan. Once they were finished with that experience, they sold their home and found themselves with a considerable amount of yen. Japanese law wouldn't let them take it out of the country as currency. So, they took it out in Japanese antiques and planned to start an antique business wherever they landed. The family went on to explore Australia, Mexico and Canada, but ultimately, in 1970, they came to Carmel.

The Waldroups managed the Barnyard Shopping Center until 1993, when their son, Marc, took the helm. The family sold the property in 2004, and the Thunderbird bookstore closed that same year.

Today, Waldroup lives at Carmel Valley Manor, where she runs a consignment shop called, "The ROSE," which stands for "Residents' Own Shopping Emporium."

"Proceeds from sales go to our resident council, which supports 33 active committees," she said. "We make a good contribution. But what pleases me most is that we donate what we can't use to the wider community, notably, The Salvation Army, Goodwill, and Yellow Brick Road Benefit Shop."

to prevent illegal campfires."

While the Western Rivers Conservancy — as its name implies — intends to protect waterways, Emmitt suggests the opposite could come true in Big Sur. He warned the sale could potentially lead to "substantial adverse impacts of wildfires on streams and rivers, including the Little Sur River, which the WRC says it intends to protect with the purchase and sale."

Caplin, who has rallied against the public acquisition of land in the Palo Colorado area since the 1980s, told The Pine Cone that Adler was very much opposed to the idea the federal government buying more land in the area — and even helped fund efforts to stop such deals from happening. "I knew Axel well enough to know he's spinning in his grave right now," Caplin added. The petition opposing the sale is posted at palo-petition.weebly.com.

department,' because maybe there's an element that's important," planning director Marc Wiener replied. "We have to work with these policies, so I have to think of every scenario." LePage commented, "You never will."

Wiener said he and Waffle would come back to the commission with a revised draft, probably in October, for further review before it's sent to the city council.

HOUSING

Erickson and others pointed out that the county's general plan requires 35 percent of the units to be affordable, and she said the development falls short of that. But Clark said the formula for assessing that requirement is complex, and he insisted his project meets the threshold — in part because he's paying a $206,000 in-lieu fee that would help pay for three affordable housing units to be built elsewhere in the county.

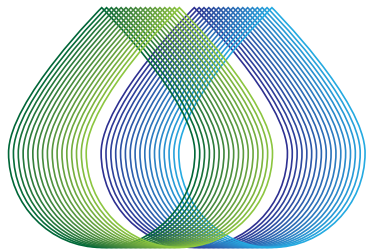

Not a single unit

Despite all the talk about the need for affordable housing, Clark said not a single affordable unit has been built in Carmel Valley since the Monterey County General Plan was updated in 2010 — and he urged the supervisors to endorse his plan. "The state has determined that the affordable housing mandate can't be ignored," he said.

Other objections to the development include concern it would increase traffic in the neighborhood, and it's located in a flood plain. Clark countered that traffic worries are based on studies using a now-outdated methodology, and he insisted the entire footprint of his project lies outside the 100-year flood plain.

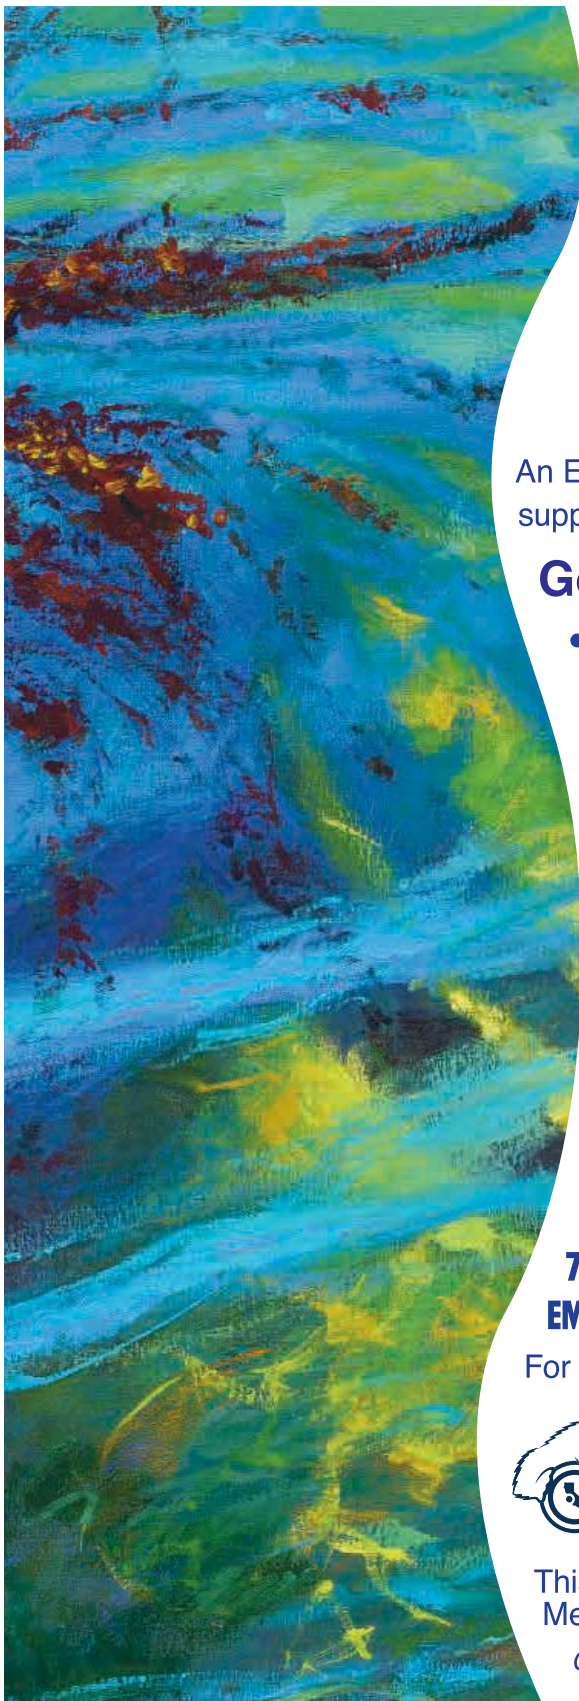

After a few comments by supervisors Jane Parker and John Phillips, the board voted to deny the project and its environmental impact report.

"CARMEL LEGENDS"

There are certain sacred cows in the history of Carmel who had long been praised for pioneering the artistic reputation of this extraordinary place. Oddly enough, we find it difficult to express much admiration or reverence for them, and we will probably be roundly criticized for lumping them all together as a pretty irresponsible lot. The ring leader was GEORGE STERLING, a dilettante of the early 1900's, poet by his own definition, who guided this group ne'er-do-wells through a series of revelries which would get them jailed today. One of his many buddies was AMBROSE BIERCE, a San Francisco cynic who disappeared, in 1916 or so, in Mexico. Sterling himself committed suicide at the Bohemian Club in 1926. In fact, a number of the so-called Bohemians of Carmel met similarly self-induced ends. It's a puzzlement: they partied, they picnicked, they talked and sang and drank. And they wrote: poems, short stories, plays, novels. Not one of them - STERLING, MARY, AUSTIN, JIMMY HOPPER, even SINCLAIR LEWIS was content to live an uninvolved life. They created, they invented, they revolted, they enjoyed the remarkable gift of nature which came to be called "Carmel-by-the-Sea." Disillusioned as most of them came to be, they are the fabric on which this remarkable place is woven. And we'll hear more about them in subsequent legends.

‘DO YOU BELIEVE IN AN AFTERLIFE?’ AND OTHER CONVERSATION STOPPERS

REGULAR READERS of this column may know that I meet for coffee every Monday morning with an illustrious cluster of seniors. We spend our time solving the world’s problems — that is, when we are not trying to plea-bargain our felonious infirmities down to misdemeanors. Sometimes our discussions become the inspiration for a column.

That’s what happened on Labor Day, when Carmel Plaza was jammed with more than the usual number of tourists. Apparently, everyone had already seen the Mission, and by the sheer number of shopping bags evident, they were shopped out, too. Anyway, the most senior of our group announced he had a great conversation starter. We all leaned in — not so much to give him our undivided attention, but simply so we could hear him better — whereupon he said, “Do you believe in an afterlife?” My first thought: Wow, that’s a conversation stopper if I ever heard one.

How often do you meet with people on a regular basis without knowing anything about them, except for whatever it is that binds the group together? In our case, the commonalities include long histories with Carmel, some form of artistic endeavor, friendships that have endured for decades and a basic congeniality that results in easy conversations that usually don’t require conversation starters. I am the newest newcomer to the group when it comes to having a connection to Carmel.

But I digress. There was one forceful “no,” a few “may-open, disgorging more tourists — distractions. Whatever, the topic of conversation changed like a sailboat tacking into the wind. We never returned to it. Nor did we the following week.

It was never brought up again. And I thought, “What a shame.” I was sitting with some of the most erudite gentlemen on the Peninsula and, as I expected, the conversation starter became a conversation stopper. A lost opportunity?

There are two topics of conversation where wise men fear to tread: religion and politics. Yet, what else is more important in daily discourse that these two topics — one about our involvement in temporal affairs, and one concerning our eternal lives?

Political discourse has become so incendiary, it’s clear why people avoid it if they want to maintain relationships. This area is so politically unbalanced, anyone with the temerity to wear a “Make America Great Again” cap might be found hanging from the Lone Cypress, or thrown from the Mission bes” (as in I’ll let you know when I get there), and even an “it’s complicated and I’m still thinking about it.” Everyone in the group remembered the times when I’ve written about my Catholic upbringing, so they were sure my answer was, “Yes.” And it was. Someone mentioned purgatory, but then a dog barked, or a pretty lady went by, or the door of another bus “whooshed” bell tower.

Of course, the problem is that things have become so polarized, there no longer seems to be any common ground to strive for. Usually, political zealots pull in their fangs after an election, because deep down we all know nothing much changes regardless of which group of political baboons is running the zoo.
Not so this time. Ten months after the election, the gulf between opposing political views has widened so much that friends are now former friends and even families have become almost as divided as they were during the Civil War.
Much of the political antagonism is openly displayed on social media, where normally intelligent people completely ignore the very meaning of the word "social" (communal, shared, mutual) and engage in the kind of venomous speech they would avoid in face-to-face discussions.

The spillover is what sets today's hostility apart from other post-election years. We see it in our universities, where even a hint of diverse political discourse drives some millennials to violence. Things are crazy when students object to Condoleezza Rice speaking. But they are even crazier when, at two different schools, a commencement address by former Secretary of State Madeleine Albright is protested by students from the left and from the right — for the same reason. Both groups claim she is a war criminal.
You want crazy? How's this: Oscar-winning actress Jennifer Lawrence suggested that the devastating hurricanes in Texas and Florida were signs of "Mother Nature's rage and wrath" at America for electing Donald Trump. Wait, this is a fair and balanced column, so in the interest of fairness: Ann Coulter used Twitter to insinuate that "Houston electing a lesbian mayor" would be a more likely explanation for Hurricane Harvey than climate change.

Should the important questions be ignored because the political climate is so volatile? And why has religion become just as volatile as politics? If we get into discussions about our personal beliefs, are we guilty of rebelliously challenging the status quo, or is there a way to reveal what we think without losing our friends?

For now, I don't have any of the answers. Perhaps they'll come to me in my next life.
