Beachgoers (and their dogs) warned about seal pups

By MARY SCHLEY

SEAL PUPPING season started on Monterey County beaches a couple of weeks ago, and as cute as the pudgy sea animals and their offspring are, rescuers at The Marine Mammal Center are asking people to stay away from them.

Pupping season is always the busiest time of year for rescuers at the center, which is based in Sausalito and has an operations center in Moss Landing.

Veterinarians at the center's Moss Landing location "have already seen a number of human and dog interactions with seal pups so far this year" on Monterey Peninsula beaches, according to Giancarlo Rulli, communications associate for the center. "Most of the cases this year have involved beachgoers surrounding weaned northern elephant seals that have hauled out to rest."

Moms abandon babies

Several people have also failed to keep their dogs away from harbor seal pups lounging on local beaches while their seal moms were just offshore foraging for food.

"Unfortunately, in these circumstances, many times the mother will abandon her pup once an interaction has occurred," Rulli said, which means rescuers from the center have to pick up the pup and nurse it until it's old enough and strong enough to return to the ocean.

While they occasionally end up on the sand at Carmel Beach, which is open to the public and allows dogs to be off leash, the baby seals and their mothers are usually in areas that have been closed off and posted with signs warning people to stay away, like in Pacific Grove, Pebble Beach and Point

Ratings cast doubt on future of Big Sur's bridges

By CHRIS COUNTS

ONE OF its landmark bridges (at Pfeiffer Creek) failed two years ago, another (at Limekiln Creek) is in need of a very expensive replacement, and now state officials are saying that many of Big Sur's bridges are approaching the end of their lifespans, leading to concerns that heavily traveled Highway 1 along the Monterey County coast could be headed for a bridge repair crisis.

Data provided this week by the American Road and Transportation Builders Association suggests that some of Big Sur's most iconic bridges — including the world famous Bixby Bridge — are in no better shape than the bridge at Limekiln Creek, which Caltrans announced in February has deteriorated so much it will need to be replaced at a cost of $64 million. No timetable has been set for the work.

According to the data, the failing bridge at Limekiln Creek has a "deficiency status" of "fair" and a "sufficiency rating" of 46.4 out of 100. The former indicates whether a bridge is classified as "structurally deficient," while the latter indicates if a bridge is "sufficient to remain in service." Meanwhile, Bixby Bridge, which has not been scheduled for repair or replacement, also has a deficiency status of "fair" and a sufficiency rating of 47.

Should we worry?

Rocky Creek Bridge has a deficiency status of "fair," and a sufficiency rating of 46.5. Bridges that cross Garrapata Creek, Big Creek and Villa Creek have nearly identical ratings, while the one that crosses Granite Creek has the lowest sufficiency rating, 42. Other bridges along the Big Sur coast that are listed in the report have deficiency statuses of "good" and sufficiency ratings of at least 60.

Jim Shivers of Caltrans said that, despite the ratings, Big

Coping with Prohibition and the Great Depression

The 33rd U.S. Amateur Championship was played at Pebble Beach in early September 1929; no USGA championship had ever been played west of St. Louis, and the pressure was on to make it a great event. It was, but the next month world economics turned to disaster as the stock market crashed and the Great Depression began.

PART VII

THERE HAD always been a question raised in the East as to whether California courses were as good as other courses. It was questioned whether proper grass could be produced in country that didn't have rain during the summer. Those who knew California and who knew Pebble Beach had no doubts about it, but they were, of course, in the minority.

The Morse memoirs

We got the championship here in 1929. There are few golf courses in the world that have as magnificent a setting as Pebble Beach. It is hard sometimes to concentrate on the game. In the fall, the weather is almost always perfect on the Penin-

Cal Am drops appeal but complains of 'resounding' bias

By KELLY NIX

ACCUSING THE mayor of Marina and two council members of "blatantly obvious" bias against its proposed desalination plant, California American Water Monday suddenly withdrew its appeal of the city's rejection of a development permit for wells that would provide the source water for the plant.

Cal Am was set to go before the Marina City Council Tuesday night to challenge the planning commission's denial for a permit for its wells, which would draw seawater for the desal plant north of Marina.

But late last week, Cal Am demanded that Mayor Bruce Delgado and two councilwomen recuse themselves from the hearing due to what the company said was their repeated public opposition to the desal plant.

The utility said it would be unable to get a fair and impartial hearing because of the council members' alleged prejudice.

"Unfortunately, Mayor Delgado and councilmembers Gail Morton and Lisa Berkley have demonstrated resounding and ongoing bias toward" the desal plant "that confirms they cannot act as impartial decision makers and necessitates their recusal from this matter," a Cal Am attorney said in an April 23 letter to Marina.

Three 'biased' members of the council refuse to recuse

Bias examples

The water company cited what it said were numerous examples of bias, including their membership in Citizens for Just Water, a group created to oppose the desal facility.

Documents Cal Am said it obtained through public records requests showed that Delgado has had frequent contact with the group and KP Public Affairs, a public relations firm hired by Marina to rally against the $329 million water supply project. He also authored numerous articles that "unambiguously state his opposition" to the project.

Berkley has publicly stated that the desal proposal project "has no water rights" and called it "basically illegal" and "dangerous to the environment," and Morton went as far as "coaching members of the public" during a community meeting April 18 on "how they could better advocate against" the desal plant, Cal Am said.

Falling for Frenchies

MIGHTY LITTLE creatures with determination in their sturdy stances and ancient eyes, Benny and Sadie are baby French bulldogs whose small stature is the result of an 1800s cross between English bulldogs and terriers.

Born in Carmel Valley, these brown babies came to their Carmel Meadows home at 3 months. No one in their family expected them.

"I'm kind of a Labrador person, so I was against getting them, but my husband is in love with French bulldogs," their person said. "Now that we have them, I'm so in love with them, too."

When the family first saw the litter of four females and one male, they thought they were so tiny, they were like little rabbits. They chose a petite female, but Dad just couldn't leave the lone male behind. He named him Benny.

"Our teenaged daughter felt a little jealous of the puppies," said Mom, "so we invited her to name the female. She came up with Sadie."

Now 8 months old, Sadie is very energetic, while Benny's a little more laid back. When Sadie jumps onto the bed, she soars.

"For all her muscular figure, Sadie really flies," her person said. "Her brother doesn't do that. He's a little chubby."

Mostly, they play well together. One minute, they're racing around the dinner table. The next moment, they're calm and cuddled up.

"Benny and Sadie sleep together in a crate, sometimes on top of each other," their person said. "They snuggle and, oh my gosh, they're so cute."

Sadie's energy is balanced by Benny's social style. When their person first took them to Carmel Beach, Sadie cavorted along the shore, while Benny stopped to greet every person he passed, just wanting to say hello.

She said, "As soon as I saw them playing at the beach, I said, 'That's it. I'm into Frenchies.'"

Buddy Wilkins

February 18, 2007 - April 7, 2019

Our Buddy gave us 12 years of companionship, laughs, and love. Buddy was well known on Carmel Beach. In his earlier years, Buddy could be seen running up and down the beach, rough housing with his many friends. He was also known to run circles around other dogs and human friends, herding them in as only a Border Collie mix would do. Although Buddy slowed down with age, two things remained constant: Buddy would seek out his human friends that he knew would give him a treat, and, for the unsuspecting, he would jump up, sailing through the air, stealing entire treat bags!

Thanks for all the great times, handsome man!! Ever the gentleman. We love you.

Suspected DUI driver smashes Mercedes into Dallas cypress

By MARY SCHLEY

A 36-YEAR-OLD Palo Colorado Canyon resident who was allegedly drunk smashed his Mercedes SUV into a cypress tree next to former Mayor Steve Dallas' house at Santa Fe and Third early Saturday morning and then tried to walk away from the accident, according to a neighbor and police.

Dallas wasn't home at the time, but Jan Damnavits, who lives across the street, heard the crunch of metal against the tree at around 1:15 a.m. April 28 and ran out to see what had happened. Damnavits said he called police and checked on the driver, identified by Carmel P.D. as 36-year-old James Bachez.

"It appeared to me he was definitely intoxicated," Damnavits said. "When I approached the car and asked him if he was OK. He said, 'Yes,' — and then he tried to start his car a few times. I think he was going to drive away."

He couldn't because his SUV was embedded in the trunk of the cypress, which was leaning as a result of the impact. According to Damnavits, Bachez got out of the car, then got back in, and then got out again and left the scene.

When a Carmel Police officer arrived, Damnavits pointed out the driver walking down the street.

"The officer asked him why he was walking away," Damnavits said. "He said he wanted to get some air." He also told the officer he had been going "about 40 mph" while knowing the speed limit is 25 mph. And he said he had been at Turn 12 in Monterey and had about three drinks, to which the officer expressed some skepticism, according to Damnavits.

After a series of field sobriety tests, Bachez was arrested for DUI, handcuffed and taken to Monterey County Jail.

Dallas later said if the tree hadn't been there, the car would have crashed through someone's home. The tree was so heavily damaged, the public works and forestry department had the cypress cut down Monday morning. Bachez also hit a city sign.

Verdicts, pleas and sentencings announced by Monterey County District Attorney Jeannine Pacioni

March 5 — Richard Murray, age 42, entered no contest pleas to nine counts of child sexual abuse: three counts of oral copulation, one count of sodomy, one count of sexual penetration, one count of forcible rape and three counts of lewd and lascivious acts. All crimes were perpetrated upon a family member under the age of 14, starting at age 4 and ending at age 13, from 1999 to 2008. Murray also admitted a special allegation for a prior conviction of child sexual abuse.

The disclosure by the victim and investigation by Marina Police Department occurred in 2013. The Monterey County District Attorney's Office extradited the defendant from the state of Oregon where he was serving a 6-year sentence for child sexual abuse which occurred in 2011.

Judge Carrie Panetta will sentence the defendant to a term of 40 years in the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation and order him to register as a sex offender.

Marina Police Department Detectives Pablo Andrade and Octavio Barocio as well as District Attorney Investigator Oliver Minnig investigated the case.

March 5 — Alfonso Gonzalez Loma, 22, entered pleas of no contest to oral copulation of a minor and attempted rape of a minor for an incident that occurred October 15, 2017. Loma, of Salinas, was attending a family party when he approached a vehicle where a 15-year old female and her 6-year-old brother were waiting for their parents to exit the party. The defendant told the girl that her father needed her inside the party and when she opened the car door, the defendant entered the vehicle and asked for a kiss. When the victim refused, he attempted to remove her clothes. When the girl fought back, the defendant made the victim perform oral copulation on him.

The victim's parents approached the vehicle and pulled the defendant out of the vehicle. A fight broke out among party-goers and a neighbor called the police. The young girl reported the attack. The defendant faces up to six years and two months in the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation. Judge Panetta will impose sentence.

County ramps up PR efforts as ambulance contract comes under more fire

By MARY SCHLEY

IN RESPONSE to increasing criticism from local fire departments and the public over its plans for hiring a new ambulance company, the Monterey County Emergency Services Agency has been running ads in local newspapers claiming the new contract will provide better service at lower costs. County officials also created a lengthy web page heralding what it says will be the benefits of the new ambulance service in Carmel Valley and other parts of the county.

But a half-dozen speakers at last Tuesday's Monterey County Board of Supervisors meeting didn't buy into the message and again asked decision makers to put the whole process on hold or start over again.

Last month, the county launched its advertising campaign. A contract with The Pine Cone calls for a 3-by-6-inch ad to run four times at $340 per issue, and it's unknown how much taxpayer money is being spent on ads in other publications.

A much larger half-page ad in a recent Monterey Herald tells readers, "The new ambulance contract will deploy ambulances in a more equitable manner throughout your county. Because ambulances will be placed where calls are likely to occur, many callers will receive an ambulance quicker. Ambulances will be equitably distributed, based on call history." It also says the new contract "will provide you with a higher level of emergency medical services."

'Misinformation'

But at the April 23 board of supervisors meeting, several speakers representing local firefighters, paramedics and EMTs criticized the way the EMS Agency is going about hiring a new ambulance company to take over in February 2020, and one took issue with the ads themselves.

Sean Edwards, director of the San Benito-Monterey chapter of Cal Fire Union Local 2881, called the ads "misinformation" and "misleading." Edwards said that deciding where to locate ambulances based on call history means that areas with few calls in the past will get poor service in the future. And the ad's promises regarding dispatching times, Edwards noted, are nothing new. "That already happens — that happens right now,"

City red-tags former councilwoman

By MARY SCHLEY

A BUILDING inspector posted a stop-work order at former city councilwoman Victoria Beach's house last Thursday after she refused to let him in to examine what he suspected was construction work being done without permits, according to chief building official Dick Bower.

Beach, who lives at the corner of Acacia Way and Trail View near Mission Trail park and the Forest Theater, has a permit to re-roof the home, which is why a city official stopped by for a visit in the late morning April 25.

"While performing a required inspection on a re-roofing permit at the site, our inspector found construction debris not associated with the roofing project and contacted a tile contractor who was delivering tile to the site," he told The Pine Cone.

When the inspector asked Beach for permission to go in and investigate the apparent construction underway inside her home, she refused, according to Bower.

As a result, the inspector posted a stop work order demanding that all activity cease until she submits plans to the city and obtains whatever permits she needs to have the work done legally.

City administrator Chip Rerig said the job appeared to include plumbing and sheetrock. Plumbing work requires a building permit.

Beach said she didn't have time to answer any questions regarding the red tag or the circumstances leading up to it because she is "in the midst of dealing with my mom's terminal cancer."

Planning director Marc Wiener said Wednesday she has not yet responded to the red tag.

State lawmakers pass bill of rights for student loans

By KELLY NIX

A BILL introduced by Assemblyman Mark Stone that seeks to protect students from “predatory” loans has overcome its first hurdle in the state Legislature.

The State Assembly Banking and Finance Committee last week passed AB 376, which would create a Student Borrower Bill of Rights ensuring that students are given reliable information, quality customer service and “meaningful” access to repayment and debt forgiveness programs.

“With AB 376, we are creating a program that expands protections for Californians and stops the abuses that the student loan industry does to borrowers,” Stone told The Pine Cone this week.

In California alone, about four million people owe $134 billion in student debt, Stone said.

Protections for student borrowers are necessary, the 29th District assemblyman said, because said the loan industry is plagued with “predatory” practices.

Monitors risks

For instance, he said loan companies often discourage alternative payment plans that would benefit students, fail to respond to questions and payment processing errors, and don’t give sufficient information to students about payments, benefits, interest rates, and other charges.

And unlike other mortgage and credit card loan industries, student loan companies are unregulated.

“This is an industry that you think would be customer facing, but it’s not,” Stone said.

The bill would enable greater transparency and oversight by establishing report cards published regularly to allow students to compare loan servicing companies based on their business conduct.

It would also require the state Department of Business Oversight — which regulates financial services — to monitor risks to consumers regarding student loans and authorize the agency to gather information about lenders, their conduct and individuals who work for them, according to the bill.

State lawmakers in 2016 passed a bill that created the first regulatory program for student loans in the nation. Since then, Stone said the federal government has “significantly stepped back from their duty to protect consumers,” including closing the office that investigated student loan abuses and fraud.

The vote for the assemblyman’s current bill was made along party lines, with Republicans in Sacramento voting against it, he said.

Student loan company lobbyists are also fighting the bill, arguing that the federal government trumps any state regulations to its industry.

California Attorney General Xavier Becerra filed suit against the largest student loan company in the United States for alleged “widespread abuses” affecting borrowers at “every stage of repayment,” Stone said. The company has reportedly called the claims unfounded.

About 44 million Americans are saddled with student loan debt amounting to $1.5 trillion, according to the Student Borrower Protection Center, a nonprofit that advocates for student loan rights and protections, Stone said.

‘Hello, Dolly!’ auditions

SINGERS AND dancers from 16 and up are sought for an upcoming Forest Theater Guild production of “Hello, Dolly!”

Auditions will offered at the Carmel Youth Center Sunday, May 5, at 1 p.m. No appointments are necessary, but singers are encouraged to prepare to sing a tune, preferably one from a Broadway musical.

Directed by Walt DeFaria and starring Gracie Poletti and Michael Jacobs, “Hello, Dolly!” opens June 26 at the Forest Theater. The musical continues through July 14.

The Carmel Youth Center is located at Torres and Fourth.

Name changes fail to protect sex offender from felony convictions

PINE CONE STAFF REPORT

A CONVICTED sex offender from Arizona who changed his name from Keeffe Branch to Brett Randoff Toriano Keeffe Henry Kana-Shaphel Hithrappes Jones-Theophilus in 1999, moved to Puerto Rico in 2014, and then changed his name again to Eeon and moved to California in 2016, was found guilty by a jury this week of two felony counts of failing to register as a sex offender and one count of driving without a license, according to Monterey County deputy district attorney Lana Nassoura.

The 51-year-old man, simply referred to as Brett Jones by the DA, was convicted of failing to register as a sex offender in Puerto Rico in 2014 and moved to Salinas in 2016, and then to Carmel, where he lived for five months, until May of last year. He never registered as a sex offender in California, either, as required by law. Nassoura said district attorney investigator Steven Guidi “wrote a search warrant for all the data from Eeon’s email accounts,” which revealed that Jones and Eeon “were the same person.”

Following his conviction May 1, Jones was lodged at Monterey County Jail, and Monterey County Superior Court Judge Carrie Panetta is set to sentence him on May 30. Jones faces up to four years and two months in prison.

Families needed to care for foster youth

By KELLY NIX

THERE’S A critical need for foster families to care for more than 400 children in Monterey County without homes, according to an organization that provides foster care and adoption services.

Salinas-based Kinship Center said it’s ramping up recruitment and awareness efforts to find more foster families to care for children and give them loving homes. May is Foster Care Awareness Month.

“When we speak of children in foster care, we typically mean children who have been removed from their primary caregivers and are now dependents of the juvenile court,” Chandra Allen, Kinship Center placement program director, told The Pine Cone.

The need for foster families is especially great for certain categories of young people, said the Kinship Center, which pairs children with families, offers education and training for foster and adoptive families, and provides case management and mental health and counseling services.

“Currently there are very few families for sibling sets and older youth,” Allen explained. “Unfortunately, this means that siblings are sometimes separated. It also means that children and youth end up being placed far from their home community.”

Kinship Center is one of many nonprofits in the state feeling the pressure to find foster homes for children because of a 2016 California Assembly bill that seeks to phase out group-home foster care. With fewer children being put into group homes, the need for foster families is greater.

“This increased need has put an additional strain on a selection of foster families that is already stretched thin,” Allen said. “There are currently 800 children living in group homes in California who now must vacate and find foster care placement with families.”

A shortage of foster families is also causing more Monterey County youth to age out of foster care without a family support system. Those children face a grim future.

CHOMP gets $225,000 wheelchairs

By KELLY NIX

THEY'RE NOT inexpensive, but the new wheelchairs designed by a celebrated American architect that the Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula started using this week will make life a little more comfortable for patients and those who push them, officials said.

The fully redesigned wheelchairs, the brainchild of the late renowned designer and architect Michael Graves, were first put into use at the hospital Tuesday. CHOMP spokeswoman Brenda Moore told The Pine Cone they were designed especially for hospital use.

"You don't have to bend over to engage the brake, the armrests flip completely out of the way so you can roll up a table or slide off the seat onto another seat, and the foot pedals don't detach because they don't need to; they just fold out of the way," Moore explained.

The 72 new wheelchairs allow those pushing them to engage and disengage the brakes using foot pedals. The seat and back rests are covered in a washable vinyl and ergonomically designed handles are positioned to make "pushing more comfortable." The footrests are spring-loaded and automatically fold when there is no weight on them, which eliminates the need for their removal like traditional wheelchairs.

Emblazoned with the colorful Montage logo on the wheels, the wheelchairs feature built-in holders for oxygen tanks and poles to hang IV bags.

"Also, they don't fold, so they are less likely to be stolen," Moore said.

The Prime TC Transport Chair, as it's called, is 40.2 inches long, 28.3 inches wide and has a weight capacity of 500 pounds.

They're not cheap, though. While traditional wheelchairs cost about $1,200, Moore said the hospital paid about $2,800 each for the Graves' versions.

They were paid for with $225,000 given to the hospital by the Auxillary, a volunteer group for CHOMP's parent company, Montage Health, which raised the funds from sales in the hospital's gift shop and café and membership dues.

Hospital security director Ken Gordon said the new rides will be a "great benefit" to patients and visitors. "One of the services that volunteers often provide is pushing the wheelchairs of patients who are being discharged, so they will see firsthand the difference this gift makes," Gordon said.

Auxillary member Sieun Lee demonstrates the new wheelchairs CHOMP is using thanks to a $225,000 gift from the group.

Police chief says city is ready for U.S. Open crowds

By MARY SCHLEY

CHAT WITH a local for five minutes, and more than likely, the topic of the U.S. Open will arise: How will we deal with the traffic? Where will everyone park? Will the fire engine and ambulance be able to get down my street? What will we do if 50,000 people need to evacuate?

Carmel Police Chief Paul Tomasi said those questions — and many others regarding the June 10-16 tournament expected to draw 265,000 fans to the Pebble Beach Golf Links over the course of its seven days — will be answered by the time the crowds arrive, and many are already resolved. He is set to present a report about planning and preparation for the U.S. Open to the city council at its May 7 meeting.

“The city’s police and public works departments are proactively taking steps to ensure public safety and minimize impacts due to this short-term but substantial increase in pedestrian and vehicle traffic in our village,” he wrote.

Regarding parking, a significant concern for residents and business owners, none will be allowed in the neighborhoods at the northwest end of town near the Carmel Gate, similar to the setup during AT&T Pebble Beach Pro-Am week, and the normally all-day parking on the west side of San Antonio and in the large lot at the foot of Ocean Avenue will be restricted to two hours.

“People park down there and walk in to Pebble, so we’re going to make it all two-hour parking so it’s available for our residents and visitors,” Tomasi told The Pine Cone Thursday.

Safety and security

The chief said he also plans to have more officers on duty during tournament week, similar to the schedule used during the July 4 holiday, and is hoping to have more private security guards patrolling the beach to prevent illegal fires and other problems. More public works staff will be on beach duty, too.

Large events tend to lead to more crime, from public drunkenness and bar fights, to thefts, burglary and fraud, according to Tomasi. “The increase in people in our village will inevitably bring more opportunities for problems such as an increase in merchant crimes, drunk driving, public intoxication, and other criminal behavior,” he wrote in his report. “Large golf events have also included an increase in both non-professional and professional criminal activity. This includes residential, business, and vehicle break-ins, fraud, theft, and the use of counterfeit money.” Ticket scalping was a problem in town during the U.S. Open in 2010, so officers will be on the lookout for that, too.

Tomasi said he plans on meeting with various business owners, especially those that are open for late-night drinking and stores that carry high-end products, to help them prepare and protect themselves. “I want to meet with some local establishments that serve alcohol and have a conversation with them about it,” he said, including having onsite security when necessary. And at high-end retailers like Fourtane and Tiffany & Co., he’ll advise employees to be a little more skeptical of customers and payments, and to contact police if they have any suspicions at all.

A possible upside about this crowd, he said, is that U.S.

Beach fires, short-term rentals and fee hikes on council agenda Tuesday

By MARY SCHLEY

THE CITY council will delve into several meaty topics when it meets May 7 at 4:30 p.m., including the ongoing debate over wood fires on Carmel Beach, a potential ban on short-term rentals downtown and in apartment complexes, a 4.5 percent increase in fees across the board, taxpayer-funded grants for nine local organizations, and the first look at the 2019-2020 annual budget.

On beach fires, planning director Marc Wiener will ask the council to recommend changes to the rules allowing wood fires in the afternoon and evening in up to a dozen city-provided pits placed on the sand south of 10th Avenue from late spring through fall, and an unlimited number of propane fires as long as they are at least 25 feet from the bluffs.

A small group of vocal residents wants wood fires banned altogether, arguing for their elimination at every opportunity. Meanwhile, the planning commission last month voted to recommend allowing only propane fires, while the forest and beach commission suggested reducing the number of fire pits to six and possibly charging for their use.

Once the city council figures out how to resolve the conflict-of-interest issue that's arisen regarding a potential ban on short-term rentals because one council member has a rental permit and two others work in the hotel business, those allowed to vote will consider an ordinance Wiener drafted that would end the practice in the commercial and multifamily-residential districts. Vacation rentals shorter than 30 days have been illegal in the single-family-residential areas for three decades.

He is recommending the council eliminate vacation rentals because they cut into the supply of long-term housing, especially in apartment complexes where the rents are a little lower than in other parts of a city that is very pricey to live in, overall.

According to Wiener, the city has approved permits for 34 vacation rentals since January 2018. He suggested those owners be allowed to keep them in perpetuity, but the planning commission would prefer to see the rental permits phased out over time. The ordinance would also prohibit people with illegal rentals from advertising them.

Fee increases

Supes let locals advise about highway

By CHRIS COUNTS

BIG SUR residents have long lobbied for more input into resolving public safety issues along Highway 1 — such as the parking quagmires that exist near Point Lobos State Reserve and Bixby Bridge — and now they'll have their chance.

The Monterey County Supervisors this week agreed to approve the establishment of the Big Sur Byway Organization, which will function much like an advisory committee and make recommendations to state officials regarding public safety issues along the scenic route down the coast.

The Big Sur Coast Highway Management Plan, which was completed in 2004, directed officials to create the panel. Now, 15 years later, it is becoming a reality.

"We've been asking for several years for this, and I'm really glad it's getting going," said Butch Kronlund, executive director of the Coast Property Owners Association and a longtime proponent of creating the group.

Fifth District Supervisor Mary Adams also said she is pleased to see the group finally formed. "I think it's a good thing that there is a renewed focus on caring for the safety of residents and visitors," Adams said.

Previous talks with county officials to create the group had failed, in part because the county had resisted "committing staff resources to properly administer the organization."

But efforts were revived after the nonprofit Monterey Convention and Visitors Bureau volunteered "to provide some level of administrative support."

The group will meet "no less than once every six months," and its membership will include five residents (including at least one each from Carmel Highlands, the Palo Colorado area, Big Sur proper and Big Sur's South Coast). The representatives will be nominated by Adams, and appointed by a majority vote of the supervisors.

Tor House turns 100, garden party set

By CHRIS COUNTS

THE HOME of Carmel's most famous literary figure, Robinson Jeffers, Tor House celebrates its 100th birthday May 5 from 2 to 5 p.m. at its annual Spring Garden Party.

Located at Carmel Point, the home was completed in 1919, and its distinctive Hawk Tower was finished five years later.

Besides marking the Tor House's centenary, the Spring Garden Party offers the public a peek inside Jeffers' former home, and calls attention to the town's artistic heritage. During the party, bagpiper Ed Jarvis, violinists Marina Lieberman and Benjamin Sterwerf, violist Colin Hathorn and cellist Matthew Mendez will play, while artists Kati D'Amore, Tamara Keiper, and Bobbie Brainerd will paint the gardens and sell their creations.

"As you walk the Tor House spring gardens, you'll be enchanted by musicians, painters, and knowledgeable docents who will reveal fascinating details of America's great poet, philosopher and environmentalist, as well as the remarkable life he shared with his wife and muse Una," said Alan Stacy, a board member for the nonprofit Tor House Foundation, which is presenting the event.

The chief organizer of the celebration, Dan Jensen, told The Pine Cone the construction of Tor House had a profound influence on Jeffers' creative process. "His stonework and his poetry are really intertwined," Jensen explained.

The Garden Party marks the only day each year when photographers can take pictures inside Tor House. Admission is $15, and children must be at least 10. Tor House is located at 26304 Ocean View Ave. Call (831) 624-1813.

Quail celebrates women riders, off-road wonders and century-old Brits

By MARY SCHLEY

THE QUAIL Motorcycle Gathering falls on International Female Ride Day, May 4, and what better way to celebrate than by having three of the best female enthusiasts — including one who's just 11 — share their stories with the crowd? The Fireside Chat, which takes place onstage at Quail Lodge, is just one of the many attractions at an event devoted to the best of all things related to motorcycles. The gathering is above all else a show, with 300 motorcycles of all shapes, sizes, designs, purposes and ages judged by experts in their various classes — Antique, American, British, Other European, Japanese, Competition On Road, Custom/Modified, and Extraordinary Bicycles and Scooters, and a few "featured classes," which this year are the 50th Anniversary of the Honda CB750 — the first of its kind to be called a "superbike" — the 100th Anniversary of the British-built Brough Superior, and Off-Road Wonders Through the '90s, a display of "outstanding and historic off-road motorcycles."

Fireside Chats are a hallmark of the Quail motorcycle show and offer a rare chance to hear various luminaries and heroes of the sport offer candid and in-depth stories. Gordon McCall, director of motorsports for The Peninsula Signature Events held at Quail, lined up an all-female panel in honor not just of the day, but of the fact that the number of women who ride has increased 100 percent in the last decade.

Ginger Damon, owner and founder of Gigi Montrose Moto Couture apparel, will be joined by 11-year-old Kayla Yaakov, who has won more than 300 races and 35 championships, including two AMA Grand National Championships. Yaakov is considered one of the most successful youth motorcycle racers ever and holds the record for being the youngest rider to compete against adults on full-size bikes and win, which she did at the age of 9. Rounding out the trio will be journalist Cristine Sommer-Simmons, co-founder of Harley Women magazine, three-time inductee into the AMA Motorcycle Hall of Fame, and four-time competitor in the Motorcycle Cannonball cross-country race.

Another Quail Motorcycle tradition is naming a Legend of the Sport. Octogenarian Malcolm Smith, one of the most-winning off-road racers in history and costar (alongside Steve McQueen) of "On Any Sunday" will receive the honors.

The event, now in its 11th year, runs from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Lunch is included, while wine, beer and other drinks are available for purchase. Tickets are $85 in advance and $95 the day of the show. Go to www.quaillodgeevents.com.

yet, we were asked not to be redundant. While concern was raised about the lack of information, short notice for review of a 12,000-page EIR, no time for review of key information submitted to them at the meeting, along with the possible extreme cost of the project, the motion passed.

One commissioner basically just said it was a source of water for the Peninsula so that was good enough for her. That is not exactly a thorough consideration of facts.

The science accepted was the same deficient data in the EIR, which was done during the drought, and the new science data from Marina Coast Water District studies were not even discussed, even though the information was submitted. The potential future effects of this project are too important for this lack of analysis.

County politics and water

Dear Editor,

What was the recent county planning commission vote approving Cal Am's desal plant based on? In the 6-4 vote, the six commissioners who voted to approve Cal Am's desal project represent Districts 1, 2 and 3, Prunedale, Salinas, King City, etc., not the Monterey Peninsula. Residents in those districts won't have to pay for this unnecessary desal plant and see their water bills double.

Representing the Peninsula, the four commissioners from District 4 and 5 voted no. They asked for more detail and more time to read the 12,000 page EIR that Cal Am based its permit on. They questioned how this would affect the ratepayers who would actually pay for it.

Cal Am and its hospitality reps repeatedly argued this was urgent, that rationing would result if the project were delayed. Not true. We only need another 750 acre-feet to meet the state's order to stop overpumping the Carmel River by December 2021. Pure Water Monterey is on track to expand its recycled water production by another 2,250 acre-feet to meet that deadline. No worries.

Why do those who have no stake in this get to make the decision for those of us who have to live with the consequences?

Melodie Chrislock,
Public Water Now

Not a drop

Dear Editor,

Thank you for your April 19 article about the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District.

Having recently retired from the Ordinance 152 Oversight Committee, on which I had served since its inception, I'm deeply concerned about proposals to use the revenue from the water supply charge for expenses related to the takeover of our water system.

As explained in the article, the Ord. 152 revenue (other than 15 percent overhead) is to be used to fund projects that increase the local water supply. Costs related to condemning the water system do not create a drop of new water supply. The water district should listen to its oversight committee.

P.G. finds next police chief in New Jersey

By MARY SCHLEY

ASSUMING SHE passes the background investigation and signs the contract, Cathy Madalone, who has worked the past 24 years at the police department in the Borough of Bergenfield, N.J. — the last four years as its first female chief — will become the new chief of Pacific Grove P.D. in June, city manager Ben Harvey announced this week.

Madalone will also be the fourth woman in recent history to hold the position. Former Seaside P.D. Chief Vicki Myers headed PGPD in a service-sharing agreement that lasted several years until late 2015, when Steven Belcher took over as acting chief for eight months until Amy Christey became chief in August 2016. She quit last year, and Jackie Gomez-Whiteley stepped in while Ralph Andersen & Associates, which also recruited Christey, undertook the effort that led to Madalone's hiring.

Cathy Madalone

According to Madalone's bio, she was born in Staten Island, N.Y., and moved to Middletown, N.J., at age 15. She has a master's degree in sociology from Montclair State University and was the first female hired by Bergenfield P.D. She made sergeant in 2003, lieutenant in 2008 and captain in 2012. In 2015, she was appointed chief, another first for a woman in all of Bergen County.

Harvey said Madalone emerged from a field of 66 candidates who applied for the job. Ralph Andersen & Associates was paid $28,200 to find the new chief, and she "was selected based upon her qualifications and fit for the department, municipal organization and community." The city's salary range for police chief is $144,206 to $193,252, according to Harvey. When Christey was hired, her annual salary was $155,000.

According to Transparent California, in 2017, Christey received regular pay of $158,021, "other pay" totaling $22,273, and benefits worth $30,038, for a total of $210,332.

C.V. Rotary honors top Carmel High students

PINE CONE STAFF REPORT

THE CARMEL Valley Rotary held its Top 100 Dinner at the Monterey Peninsula Regional Park District headquarters, formerly Rancho Cañada, last Tuesday night to recognize the top 25 students in each of the freshman, sophomore, junior and senior classes at Carmel High School, an annual tradition. Scott Fujita, who takes over as head of school at All Saints' Day School this summer and is a former NFL star who helped the New Orleans Saints win the Super Bowl in 2010, was the featured speaker.

The students were selected by Carmel Unified School District officials to receive the honors, and those who appeared in the top 25 during all four of their years at CHS received commemorative pens, in addition to the certificates distributed to all the students that night, according to club spokesman Lewis Leader. About 300 students, family, friends and Rotarians attended the dinner.

No More Blue

The world is silent today.

The cosmic globe tilts slightly on its' axis listening for the sound of your voice which does not come. The moles and ferrets are quiet in their burrowing tunnels and the rabbits lay like soft clouds in their sheltered warren expecting your arrival.

All the earth is subdued and humbled and the living fibers of existence mark your absence. Your knowledge, the molecules of your thoughts and dreams have evaporated with the last upward drift of wind.

Your breath, like the earth itself, is quiet and still.

You are a remembered part of this world. A soul much loved and respected. Your gifts to those around you were many and rose to the surface where circumstance would allow.

Beverly Kay Cook Schneiderman

September 18, 1965 ❖ April 7, 2019

Beverly Kay Cook Schneiderman of Carmel Valley, passed away peacefully, surrounded by her loving family on April 7, 2019, after a long courageous battle with cancer. Beverly was born on September 18, 1965, in La Habra California. She attended Sonora High School, and went on to Long Beach State, where she got her nursing degree through the ROP program. She worked as a home health nurse and psychiatric nurse, throughout Southern California, until she moved to the Monterey Peninsula in 1992, after meeting her beloved husband Scott Schneiderman.

Beverly worked as a home health nurse for Choice Home Care and the Visiting Nurses Association. She then managed her husband's medical practice for over 18 years.

Beverly was a devoted loving wife and mother. She was very active in her children's lives with school and classroom activities. She was the team mom for many of her children's sports.

You could hear Beverly cheering for her kids and their team, at every sports event. She was head of the Boy Scout council troop 127 for two years and always had her home and car full of her children's friends. She was like a second mother to many of those friends.

Beverly was an avid animal lover, and always had multiple dogs and other pets. She most enjoyed spending time with her family and dogs, hiking, going to the beaches and her second home on Kauai. She loved music, Country was her favorite and movies. She loved the magnificent sunsets of the Monterey Peninsula, and working in her beautiful garden.

She was preceded in death by her mother Mildred Schmidt, her father Robert Cook and her brother, Charles Cook.

She is survived by her Loving husband of 27 years Dr. Scott Schneiderman, her four children Joshua, Rachel, Nathan and Jacob, her brother Milo, her sister Linda, her loving niece Wendy, her Godsons Gavin and Kyle, her Godsister Belinda, and many nieces, nephews and cousins.

Beverly was a dear and devoted friend. She touched so many lives on her journey here, and will be most remembered for her kindness and giving heart. She will be dearly missed by all who knew her.

The family wishes to express their gratitude to her caregiver Latika from Choice Home care. Heartland Hospice nurse, Diana, Dr. Biller, Dr. Cindy Lee, and Dr. Nancy Rubin.

At Beverly's request there will be no services. She asks that family and friends come and share in a Celebration of her Life to be held at the Elks Lodge on Saturday, May 18, 2019 from 1:00 pm - 4:00 pm.

In lieu of flowers, the family requests donations be made to the American Cancer Society or the Monterey County SPCA.

A book about life made sweeter by bees

By ELAINE HESSER

MEREDITH MAY'S bio from her Pine Cone column in fall of 1986 — Padre Prattle — described her as a high school senior who was active in many school groups and athletics, and said she held a job at Mrs. M's Fudge on weekends.

While her writing was good — she was able to do equal justice both to the homecoming football game and the parade that accompanied it — the description of her at the end of each piece didn't hint at the challenges of life at home in Carmel Valley.

For that, you'll have to read her book, "The Honey Bus: A Memoir of Loss, Courage and a Girl Saved by Bees." She described moving here as a 5-year-old with her mother and brother in the midst of a separation and divorce. They stayed with May's grandmother and her step-grandfather, E. Franklin Peace, better known as the "Beekeeper of Big Sur."

Meredith May

Peace, who died in 2015, became a mentor to May, teaching her all about beekeeping and how hive members work together to survive. He would often translate the lessons of the bees into lessons for life.

Fascinated, May traveled with him up and down the coast, servicing hives on various people's properties and spinning the honey from the combs. That happened on the title honey bus, a World War II surplus Army vehicle with no engine, where Peace stored his equipment.

Honest memories

Meanwhile, her mother had taken to her bed with what likely would now be diagnosed as severe depression, at a minimum. As May and her brother Matthew grew up, May began to have more and more painful run-ins with her mother. Each time, the Honey Bus and Peace's office became her refuges.

It's a story both of sadness and of gentle healing. It is written with compelling emotion, but manages not to be maudlin or nasty — just the honest memories of a girl trying to sort out a childhood that wasn't like any of her friends'. That may explain its popularity nationwide.

May has been on a book tour through the San Francisco Bay area, where she makes her home after a career at the San Francisco Chronicle. Her travels have taken her to Southern California and cities as far-flung as Minneapolis and Boston.

"I'm soaking it all in," she said. She added that she was enjoying every moment because she was relatively certain she wouldn't have another book as successful as "The Honey Bus." She's chronicling her travels on social media, and it's clear she's having a great time. Along with the signings, she does honey tastings and talks about bees and their importance to pollination and the nation's food supply.

This Saturday she'll be at Nepenthe from 4-6 p.m. to meet and greet readers as part of the restaurant's 70th anniversary series of events. In an old Big Sur tradition brought back for the evening, there will belly dancers, because Peace loved going to Nepenthe and watching them. The event is open to the public, and, May said, "fun is an absolute certainty."

he said. “What are we trying to fix?” He encouraged the supervisors to stop the process.

In its 2,400-word defense of the new contract on its web page, the county says it had to follow “a long process which includes collecting and encouraging input from responder agencies and the public and oversight by state and county authorities,” and that “extensive efforts were made to get public and stakeholder input.”

But at the April 23 meeting in Salinas, Josh Hostetter from Salinas Fire asked the board to get more feedback before signing a new contract, and Silas Fischer, a firefighter and paramedic for 17 years and a member of the Monterey Firefighters Union Local 3707, said he’s “noticed a growing trend of not taking into account the views of stakeholders who respond daily to emergencies around this county.”

Firefighter Kenny Hutchinson, vice president of the Monterey Firefighters union, said the whole process lacked collaboration. “You have included policies that affect all service areas in Monterey County,” he said. “There was no public discussion involving the policies.”

Samuel Klemek, interim fire chief for the City of Salinas, said he’s been involved in contract negotiations for ambulance service here since the 1980s. “It has always been an open process, but for some reason, this process has been anything but transparent,” he said. “Take a pause. Start over again.”

Fischer also noted the new ambulance company, not the county, would be in charge of emergency dispatching, and therefore deciding what resources to send where. “I ask the county to look closely at the EMS Agency and ask if it is truly acting in best interest of the constituents,” he said. He encouraged the board to reject all proposals from ambulance companies, “so we can start fresh.”

Cal Fire Unit Chief David Fulcher pointed out that the new contract will allow increased response times — and have no required response times at all in some areas — and will no longer guarantee the closest ambulance will respond to a 911 call, a change much discussed since it came to light.

On its webpage, the county contends the contract will not change the closest-ambulance provision. The new ambulance company could choose to sign “mutual-aid agreements” with other ambulance providers, like Carmel Fire Ambulance and Monterey County Regional Fire, so it could ask them to respond to 911 calls when desired.

But that’s a downgrade, Fulcher said, since the closest ambulance now responds to an emergency, regardless of jurisdiction. “Automatic aid is what it should be, and that is what is happening now,” he said.

County says it can’t pause

He also noted the new contract would allow the ambulance company to bill patients who don’t get transported to the hospital, counter to current practice, and it calls for sending EMTs, as opposed to higher-trained and higher-paid paramedics, to 911 calls that are considered lower-level emergencies. Not only did county residents vote for a parcel tax specifically to fund paramedic-staffed ambulances for every call, he noted, but sometimes the call the dispatcher receives does not reflect the actual situation.

“I have been doing this for 32 years,” he said. “Calls come through, and they are not necessarily what they say they are. A fall victim could be in full cardiac arrest when you get there.”

County officials state that if a new agreement isn’t signed before Jan. 31, 2020, ambulance service throughout the county will essentially fall apart. “Anyone wanting to provide ambulance service could do so. The contract-based standards for response times, clinical quality, paramedic training, and safety would end,” their web page says. “Ambulance providers would rush to serve urban and suburban areas with high call volumes and people with high-paying private medical insurance. Ambulance providers would not want to serve rural areas with low call volumes or areas with people with poorly-paying medical insurance. Having an open ambulance system in Monterey County would constitute a preventable threat to public health and safety.” They do not explain why the current contract couldn’t be extended until a new one is signed.

Opponents are launching their own ad campaign to counter the county’s.

Blood drives in Carmel, Monterey

ONE VICTIM in a car accident can use up to 100 units of blood, according to Christine Welch from the Red Cross Northern California Blood Services, which is holding blood drives on the Peninsula in May, Trauma Awareness Month. The average adult’s body contains about 11 units of blood.

“There’s no way to predict when or where an accident will happen,” she said. “That’s why the American Red Cross needs donors to give blood and platelets during Trauma Awareness Month this May and throughout the year to help ensure that trauma centers are prepared when an injured patient arrives.”

Donors need to be at least 17 years old and weigh at least 110 lbs., and be in good health.

Upcoming blood drives will be held at the Church of the Wayfarer on Lincoln between Ocean and Seventh avenues May 7 from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m., and at Capital Insurance Group, 2300 Garden Road, on May 17 from 10 a.m. to 2:30 p.m.

receive a short presentation about May 7 in advance of a special meeting on the spending plan set for May 14 — budgets and contracts director Sharon Friedrichsen is also proposing an increase in the fees charged for building permits, tree removals and numerous other “services.”

A city policy calls for raising fees annually based on the San Francisco-Oakland consumer price index, which increased 4.5 percent between December 2017 and December 2018.

Each year, the city council also gives away some money by handing out taxpayer-funded grants to local groups undertaking projects that benefit the community.

Each gift can be up to $3,000, and the council capped the total at $20,000. This year, the city received nine applications requesting a total of $22,020, and Friedrichsen will seek feedback on which to fund.

Paving streets, counting fish

Also on the agenda Tuesday, but on the consent calendar and therefore slated for approval without discussion unless someone requests otherwise, are several items, including a $951,874 street-paving contract with Don Chapin Company, an appropriation of $80,000 to buy vehicle barriers for blocking streets during public events, and a five-year “landowner access agreement” with the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District so biologists can cross city property to count steelhead in the lower Carmel River.

And on Monday, after opening a special meeting at 4:30 p.m. and listening to any public comments, the council will go into closed session to discuss labor negotiations and three ongoing lawsuits, and to “confer with and receive advice from legal counsel regarding release of confidential investigation report regarding complaints of sexual harassment (March 1, 2018),” made against former Mayor Steve Dallas.

Acting city attorney Jon Giffen will report the results of the session — any that are publicly disclosable, that is — toward the beginning of the next day’s meeting.

For more information, go to www.ci.carmel.ca.us. City hall is located on Monte Verde south of Ocean.

Open golf guests are more fans of the game than they are celebrity seekers, like many who attend the AT&T Pro-Am are.

Pebble Beach and Carmel already have evacuation plans in case of a wildfire, tsunami or other disaster, but Tomasi wants to ensure they will work together in the event tens of thousands of people, many on foot, will be able to get out of the Forest and out of the city safely, if necessary. The chief has shared his concerns during conversations about the operations plan, and said he submitted a list of questions to be addressed. He said also everyone will be on the same radio frequency so they can communicate during a large-scale emergency.

Tomasi said the USGA and Pebble Beach are holding several meetings for stakeholders, public safety and others, and he plans to get all of his questions answered before the crowds arrive next month. The chief plans to deliver his report to the council at the May 7 meeting, which starts at 4:30 p.m. in city hall on Monte Verde south of Ocean.

“Having directly opposed” the water project “in many forums,” Cal Am said, “Mayor Delgado and councilmembers Morton and Berkley have displayed a long and indisputable record of bias that precludes them from considering” the permit application for the project.

Delgado, Morton and Berkley did not respond to messages from The Pine Cone seeking comment.

Refused to recuse

Had the city council members recused themselves, the five-member council would not have had a quorum to hold the appeal hearing. However, Marina insisted on going on with the meeting, prompting Cal Am Monday afternoon to withdraw its appeal.

Besides “unequivocal evidence” of bias, Cal Am also accused the Marina council of delaying the desal plant “at every administrative step,” which the company said is not only “legally improper” but risks “harmful consequences” to its Monterey Peninsula customers and the economy.

Cal Am faces severe cutbacks from the Carmel River, its primary water source, if it doesn’t meet a state-ordered deadline to build the desal plant, an alternative water supply source.

The county planning commission last week voted 6-4 to OK a permit for the desal treatment facility. Marina officials urged commissioners to oppose the plant even though the facility is not within its jurisdiction.

The desal facility is necessary for Cal Am to deliver water to Castroville and, on a much larger scale, provide a drought-proof water source for the Monterey Peninsula.

Cal Am began pursuing the desal plant — and other facilities for the Monterey Peninsula Water Supply Project — in January 2012.

Marina has long opposed the project, contending the operation would mean a loss of groundwater in the Salinas Valley basin, exacerbate groundwater intrusion and infringe on the water rights of farmers and others.

Cal Am says the project would only pump non-potable water unfit for human consumption and irrigation, and would not worsen seawater intrusion.

The company said that the Marina Planning Commission’s denial of the permit “should now stand as the city’s final decision,” which would allow it to appeal to the California Coastal Commission. The commission approved the desal plant’s test well in 2014 and the Public Utilities Commission OK’d the full desal plant in September 2018.

The coastal development permit from Marina is one of the last major permits Cal Am needs for the facility, which must be completed by 2021. The company also must start construction of the facility by Sept. 30 to avoid a 1,000-acre-foot pumping reduction from the Carmel River, the Peninsula’s primary water source.

“Within two to four years of exiting foster care, 20 percent will have been homeless; 50 percent will have been unemployed; 40 percent will have been incarcerated or on public assistance; 20 percent of males will become career criminals; 84 percent will become single parents; and 97 percent will never graduate from college,” Kinship Center said, citing National Foster Youth Institute data.

Families that apply to foster or adopt children undergo a Kinship Center assessment process, which includes training, before they’re approved.

“We also have a support group for any past or present foster/adoptive parents in the area,” Allen said. “The placement program also provides counseling for parents who may be considering adoption for their child.”

Kinship Center finalized 64 adoptions last year.

“Every effort must be made to provide loving, permanent homes for youth impacted by trauma so they can heal and grow,” Kinship Center executive director Carol Bishop said in a statement.

MAX-A-MILLION

Someone is adopting a great little dog when they take this guy home! Max-a-Million came to us when his family of nine years could no longer care for him. He’s lived with kids and is good with other dogs. Max is a happy-go-lucky guy who gets along well with everyone – maybe you are too? He’d love to be your beach buddy!

Max-a-Million is a 9-year-old, 13 pound Shih Tzu mix.

If you’d like to meet Max-a-Million, please fill out an online adoption application.

Lobos State Reserve. But still, some people fail to listen.

“It’s critical that these young pups have the time to nurse with their mothers along the Monterey coast,” Julia O’hern, Moss Landing operations manager, said. “It’s really important for people to respect posted beach signage and keep their distance to ensure the safety of marine mammals,” not to mention their own pets.

Last year, Rulli said, The Marine Mammal Center responded to 19 human and dog interactions with seals and sea lions on Monterey County beaches.

“We really want to get the message out to folks to please keep a safe distance and give us a call to report a sick, injured or stranded marine mammal,” he said.

Carmel P.D. animal control officer Cindi Mitchell, who regularly handles calls involving stranded otters, seals and sea lions on Carmel Beach, agreed.

It’s important to keep away and help keep other people and their dogs away, too, she said.

Rulli mentioned an incident last spring when an elephant seal pup at Carmel River State Beach was poked with sticks by people who wanted see if it was still alive. Rescuers picked up the female pup and took her to the center’s main hospital in Sausalito, where she was diagnosed with malnutrition and dehydration.

Fortunately, “she gained nearly 50 pounds during rehabilitation and received a second chance at life,” he said.

Last year, rescuers picked up 86 seals, sea lions and sea otters “due to negative human interaction” on beaches along the coast from San Luis Obispo to Mendocino county, he added.

Anyone who sees a seal or sea lion that appears to be in distress should call The Marine Mammal Center’s rescue hotline at (415) 289-7325.

the visiting firemen?" [A common term of the era, meaning people who wanted to put out the fires in their throats by drinking.] Prohibition was in effect and the problem of dispensing hospitality was a serious one. Someone solved the matter by suggesting we form a club. There were 50 original members and we subscribed $50 apiece, which gave us $2,500. We took what was then Canary Cottage — the building next to the Lodge — put tables and a bar in the main room and a good chef in the kitchen, took a couple of our good bartenders, and stocked the place with enough to get under way.

Money for partying

The night before the tournament, we had a Calcutta pool [offering people a chance to bet on their favorite player]. It sold for a total of about $135,000, of which the club took 10 percent. This gave us about $16,000 with which we had to supply food and drink for the week. All of the visiting firemen — people of importance — and also, of course, the friends of the original 50, were entitled to use the club. No checks signed; everything was on the club. One of the privileged of the club could walk in with six or eight people, have luncheon, drink Champagne or anything else he desired. It was a fantastic success.

When the tournament ended, we had a balance of about $5,000 which we hadn't been able to drink up.

I followed Bobby Jones around the afternoon that he made an eagle on the 14th. Nothing could be more mechanically perfect or satisfactory to look at than the swing of that extraordinary man. When Bobby Jones stepped up to the 14th Tee, Peter Hay in a low voice said, "Let me see you get on in two!" I heard the remark and saw Bobby smile. Up to that time, the other drives had been out with his. Bobby Jones' swing looked to me precisely as it had looked when he was making his other shots, and yet the drive when it stopped was 20 yards in front of the next longest.

He had given it the little extra force without any apparent effort.

He walked up to his ball and studied the green, which looked to me a very long way off indeed. It is an uphill approach. The green is trapped so as to leave only an opening on the right. He finally took out his brassie [a 2-wood in today's terms] and with the same exact, perfect, precise swing, hit the ball dead on the line for the pin, up the opening that I have referred to. The ball hit on the incline and rolled on the line of the pin — a distance of perhaps 10 feet beyond. He made his putt, which gave him an eagle.

Jones at this time was at the absolute pinnacle of his game, and told me that he wasn't afraid of anybody in the world in 36 holes, but that with 18 holes, it was quite possible for a man to go 2 or 3 up to start with and be impossible to catch. What one fears is apt to "get" him. Jones played Johnny Goodman in the first round. Goodman was unheard of at that time — an ex-caddy who had hooked his way out on freight trains. Goodman had one of those sensational rounds which occasionally come to good golfers.

He went up on Jones in the early part of the match and Jones couldn't cut the lead down altogether, and he lost. Jones, who is a good sportsman, smilingly congratulated the winner and immediately announced that he would stay for the rest of the tournament, to assist the officials in any way possible to make the event a success. That is the kind of man he is!

After his defeat, Jones told me that he would no longer be afraid of 18 holes. He said, "The next time I am in an 18-hole match of importance, I am going to feel mentally that I am starting 2 down." The following year was the year of his grand slam, which marked him as undoubtedly the greatest golfer who ever lived.

Jimmy Johnston was the winner and, as long as Jones didn't win, the championship couldn't have been in better hands.

Johnston was liked by all, even those whom he defeated, and in every way was a credit to the game.

The tournament was a tremendous success but was followed with startling suddenness by the great financial collapse, the panic and the beginning of the Depression. I had gone to New York a short time after the tournament and I was in New York when the cyclone hit us.

Little could we foresee the tragedies of the period of the Great Depression. The adjustment of the Hotel Del Monte operation was my first problem. It must be remembered that the fixed charges go on no matter how many people there are in the house. The most striking example of this fact was that the hotel made about $320,000 in 1929 and 1930 and lost that much two years later.

A long drought

For 10 years, I don't think there was one sale made of company property in the Country Club. We handled nothing but re-sales. People threw lots on the market for next to nothing — as little as a few hundred dollars. We went on the theory that as long as there were re-sales, the company should not offer any competition.

Perhaps it is well that people can't foresee things of this sort. Undoubtedly, it makes the world a happier place in which to live. For the first few years of the Depression, we kept thinking that prosperity was just around the corner. After eight or nine years of it, it was just as difficult to believe that we could ever come out of it. It is in times like these when it is necessary for a man to have a right philosophy; without it he can't survive.

A right philosophy is based principally on a proper sense of values and happiness. It is a state of mind which is dependent only in a small way upon material possessions, but in a very large way upon good health and right thinking.

BRIDGES

Sur's bridges are safe for motorists. He also noted that each is inspected every two years.

"The ratings do not mean there are unsafe conditions," Shivers told The Pine Cone. "If there were, we would close those bridges. It simply means those bridges were identified for future improvements. The public shouldn't have immediate concerns using these bridges whether they are walking, cycling or driving"

Shivers said Big Sur's bridges were built to last. "It's a testament to the design engineers that they have stood the test of time," he said.

But he conceded that one day they will need to be replaced.

"Generally speaking, bridges have a shelf life of 60 to 80 years before they need to be replaced," he added. "The pipeline of projects will address all bridges in the state at some point."

The bridge at Limekiln Creek is 62 years old, while those at Bixby and Rocky creeks are 87 years old.

An annual report by the American Road and Transportation Builders Association which came out last month identified 47,000 structurally deficient bridges throughout the United States, including 1,812 in California and 30 in Monterey County, but only one relatively minor bridge in Big Sur near the entrance to Pfeiffer Big Sur State Park.

The topic of aging bridges is particularly relevant as Congress debates a $2 trillion plan to address the country's aging infrastructure.

In 2017, Pfeiffer Creek Bridge in Big Sur failed (left), and Highway 1 was closed for 7 months while a new bridge was built. Caltrans officials say there's no need to worry about the safety of Bixby Bridge (below) or other Big Sur bridges, although they concede they will all one day need to be replaced.

How one woman learned that her hero belonged to an entire nation

By DENNIS TAYLOR

HE WAS always her hero, albeit in a goofy-dad kind of way.

He thought he was a good singer, she remembers with a laugh, and also thought he could speak French. Whenever her mother sat down to play the piano at a party, he would invariably spring into a playful, embarrassing dance. His laugh came from the belly, rattling the walls, compelling everybody within earshot to laugh with him. He could still do one-armed pushups when he was 78 years old.

But it was only recently that 64-year-old Pacific Grove resident Jill Kleiss became fully aware that her father had been a real-life American legend.

"Those things we heard about his life through the years just kind of floated in and floated out with me," she confessed. "When somebody from CNN called [in 2014] and asked to interview him, I thought it was a prank call. But as I was overhearing the phone conversation, I was gradually realizing, 'Wow ... he wasn't making this stuff up.'"

'No clue'

At 7:15 p.m. May 9, at the Pacific Grove Public Library, in a multi-media presentation, Jill Kleiss will proudly share the story of Norman Jack "Dusty" Kleiss, a World War II dive-bomber pilot who was largely responsible for sinking three Japanese warships during the Battle of Midway, a major turning point in the war.

The event is free, and she also will sign copies of her father's book, a New York Times bestseller entitled, "Never Call Me a Hero: A Legendary American Dive-Bomber Pilot Remembers the Battle of Midway," co-authored with him by Timothy and Laura Orr, and published in 2017, a year after he died at age 100.

Capt. Kleiss was 26 years old in June of 1942 when he plunged his plane at Mach 1 (760 mph) toward the Kaga, a Japanese aircraft carrier. Kleiss pulled up at the last possible moment and dropped three bombs on the flight deck.

Later that day, he and his squadron flew a second mission that fatally crippled another Japanese carrier, the Hiryu, with Kleiss again scoring a direct hit.

The following day, Kleiss' bombs landed near the smokestack of the cruiser Mikuma. He was the only pilot in to score three direct hits during the Battle of Midway, a feat for which he was awarded the Navy Cross five months later.

Hitting a moving target at high speed was a skill he attributed to hunting rabbits from a moving car as a kid in Kansas.

Those are merely highlights of an autobiography that has sold more than 54,000 copies. His daughter will share the rest of the tale of the man she called "Poppers," much of which she discovered during the final months of his life and afterward.

She was a teenager the day she came home and was introduced by her father to Medal of Honor winner Gen. James Doolittle, in his later years a Pebble Beach resident and one of the greatest military heroes in American history.

"I had no clue who I was meeting. I just thought he was a man with a funny name, like Dr. Seuss," she said.

Her father once gave her a pin that she tossed into a drawer, and eventually lost. It wasn't until recent years that she discovered that the priceless trinket commemorated her father's role in the destruction of the Kaga.

Another hint — dismissed by the kids — that "Poppers" might really have been a World War II dive-bomber: Whenever they rode a roller coaster, while everyone else was screaming, their father would be shouting, "Borr-ring!"

"He was an incredibly humble man," she remembered. "He would take praise, and felt proud when people said, 'You did such great things during the war,' but he also pushed away, always saying that there were many others who had done far more."

He liked to talk about the war — most-

Norman "Dusty" Kleiss (center) receiving the Navy Cross, second only to the Medal of Honor, for his bravery in dive-bombing three ships during the Battle of Midway in World War II. Kleiss' daughter will speak about him at the P.G. Library.

KLEISS FAMILY

ly about the great men with whom he had served, his daughter said. "But whenever he launched into one of his stories, we'd all kind of roll our eyes. Oh, no ... not World War II again," Jill said. "Mom got pretty tired of the war stories, too."

Love letters

Mom — Jean Mochon — was "a drop-dead beauty," who was living in Long Beach when somebody talked her into a blind date with a young naval officer.

"She was the type of woman who got stopped on the street by photographers when she was 18 years old — a real looker," Jill said. "Groucho Marx sat on her lap once at the Brown Derby."

For Mochon, the date was mostly an act of charity for a soldier, but they clicked. Jack and Jean tied the knot in 1942, exchanged beautiful love letters throughout the war, and were married for 64 years, until she died of pancreatic cancer in 2006.

In retrospect, Jill believes she saw signs of combat stress in her father's personality. He showed paranoia about the government, worried about conspiracies, and became obsessed with building a backyard bomb shelter.

"There wasn't really any therapy or counseling in those days," she said. "I think Dad just dealt with it internally."

But she said he held no animosity after World War II toward the Japanese. They had a job to do, he always said. At the same time, he worried about meeting his Maker.

"In 2011, when he came down with pneumonia, he told me he was very worried that he wasn't going to get to heaven because he had killed so many people during the war," Kleiss said. "I said him, 'No, Dad, you were just doing your job,' but he really struggled with that."

On March 7, 2016 — his 100th birthday — Dusty Kleiss received congratulatory telegrams from the Obamas and Sen. John McCain. Then the phone rang, and Jill was gobsmacked to eavesdrop on conversations between her father and former President George H.W. Bush, and Secretary of Defense Ash Carter.

Reading her father's biography was yet another stunning experience for Jill Kleiss.

"Honestly, I assumed it would just be a military book — nothing I'd be too interested in — but I had tears in my eyes the entire time. I didn't want it to end," she said. "It was like I was listening to my dad talk again. I could hear his voice. It was Poppers."

only messy and leave droppings all over the place, they tend to nest on the roofs of the shopping center's stores and restaurants.

"Once seagulls nest, they're protected and you can't remove them, so you need to have a way to prevent them from nesting in the first place," said Sandoval, who works for a seagull abatement company.

The way it works is simple: After being released, Mellow spends several hours per day flying around the mall harassing gulls and other nuisance birds so they leave the property. The idea isn't to kill the birds, it's to scare them away.

"There were a couple hundred seagulls here when I started, but now you can see a difference," he said Wednesday morning during an interview at the mall, where there was nary a seagull or pigeon. "There are no nests up there now," he said, gesturing to buildings where Forever 21 and Lalla Grill, among many others businesses, are located.

Because gulls will return if they're not worried about predators, Sandoval said persistence is important.

"It's impossible to get rid of them completely," he said. "So you have to keep returning."

Weight watching

One of the trickier but crucial aspects of a falconer's job, Sandoval said, is managing a raptor's weight. If the bird is underweight, he can be too aggressive. An overweight bird won't be motivated to hunt.

"You have to find the perfect weight where he will follow you, he will listen, and at the same time" scare away the birds, according to Sandoval, who said Mellow's diet consists of quail or pigeon meat he buys from an online retailer. "It's kind of like an athlete, birds perform best when they are at a certain weight."

In his first year as a falconer, Sandoval has mostly performed bird abatement in the agricultural industry, working for cherry and blueberry farms in his native Washington.

He was introduced to the profession by Jim Nelson, a master falconer in that state who was also his mentor. Because a raptor perched on a man's arm isn't an everyday occurrence, Sandoval said he gets lots of questions from curious mall shoppers.

They ask "what type of hawk is it and what's the purpose of the hawk?" he said. "People like it because it's a natural way of getting rid of seagulls."

The City of Pacific Grove, the Pebble Beach Company and the landfill in Marina also use falconers for seagull abatement.

For information about Sandoval's services, email andres.sandoval492@gmail.com.

HISTORY

ter the course was constructed.

On Aug. 5, 1861, President Lincoln nominated Judge Haight for the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, and he was confirmed by the U.S. Senate on the same day. He filled that role, still making the Rancho his home, until his death in 1866.

Tompkins did finally get down to his rancho after first spending time in San Francisco. Like Brewer, he went to meet Judge Haight and found him charming and his daughters lovely — in particular, Sarah. Tompkins married her in December 1861, and they settled in Oakland. Getting word that a prior owner of Rancho Pescadero was trying to invalidate his acquisition, and preferring not to be mixed up in a land battle, Tompkins sold Rancho Pescadero to David Jacks in 1862 with the understanding Jacks would take responsibility for any ownership disputes (that's for another column).

Carmel's Judge Haight and family helped shape early California. His son Henry Haight became governor (1867-1871) and Tompkins served as the state senator from Alameda from 1869 until his death in 1872. Tompkins also helped lead the creation of the University of California and was appointed to the board of regents in 1868. When Tompkins died, Gov. Haight took that seat on the board.

Kids get chance to 'Drive Like a Cop'

TEENS CAN learn techniques for job interviews, basic first aid, safe use of social media, and even how to interact with police and drive like a cop — "basic maneuvers, collision avoidance, and more" — during a free multi-week life-skills program led by Salinas P.D. that begins May 6.

The first session on Monday from 6 to 9 p.m. will have young women talking about self-image and identity with SPD Chief Adele Fresé and young men discussing "Masculinity Upgraded — Strength for a Safer Community" with someone from the Monterey County Rape Crisis Center.

Subsequent Mondays, each from 6 to 9 p.m., will focus on job interview prep with Central Coast Human Resource Association, basic first aid and social media safety, and "Why'd You Stop Me?", focusing on interactions with police.

The driver safety course, "How to Drive Like a Cop," doesn't require a license or learner's permit and will take place Saturday, June 8, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., including a barbecue.

Everything happens at Salinas P.D., 222 Lincoln Ave. For more information, visit www.salinaspd.com. To learn more or to register, contact Sgt. Albert Duran at (831) 775-4201 ext. 6072 or albertod@ci.salinas.ca.us.

Editorial

You've read this editorial before

THE MONTEREY Peninsula has a grossly inadequate water supply — a situation which does continuous harm to the local economy, prevents even minimal new housing, frustrates homeowners who need to make additions to their houses, makes it difficult for anybody who's not rich to find a place to live, renders it impossible for most businesses to grow, thwarts essential public projects, discourages firefighters from practicing their skills, and forces owners of vacant land to leave it unused or sell it at a big loss. And those are the things that happen even in years with plentiful rainfall.

If a serious drought strikes, you'll have to stop flushing your toilet; yards, gardens and golf courses will go unwatered; hotels rooms will have to be shuttered; restaurants will be pressured to reduce capacity, and thousands will lose their jobs.

Meanwhile, the Carmel River is pumped dry for months almost every summer, suffocating fish, killing riparian vegetation, and leaving the riverbed looking like an off-road track.

This situation has gone on for more than 25 years and, while there are some signs of progress, it may very well continue for another several decades, if not longer. We have written about it over and over again, and we're going to keep doing it until the damn thing is finally solved by the people who created it. And who might that be? The government, that's who.

Not only have our elected officials, their predecessors and the people they've appointed and/or hired caused this water shortage, they could fix it in very short order. All they have to do is decide to.

■ Mayors and city councils may not be able to create new water projects on their own, but they must remain unified and vociferous in their demands that a solution finally be implemented.

■ The board of supervisors, while it mostly represents parts of the county with no water shortage, also has a duty to protect the health, safety and prosperity of the residents of the Monterey Peninsula. Because the situation is so urgent, it should be one of their top priorities. The recent vote at the county planning commission is a very good sign, but it's not enough.

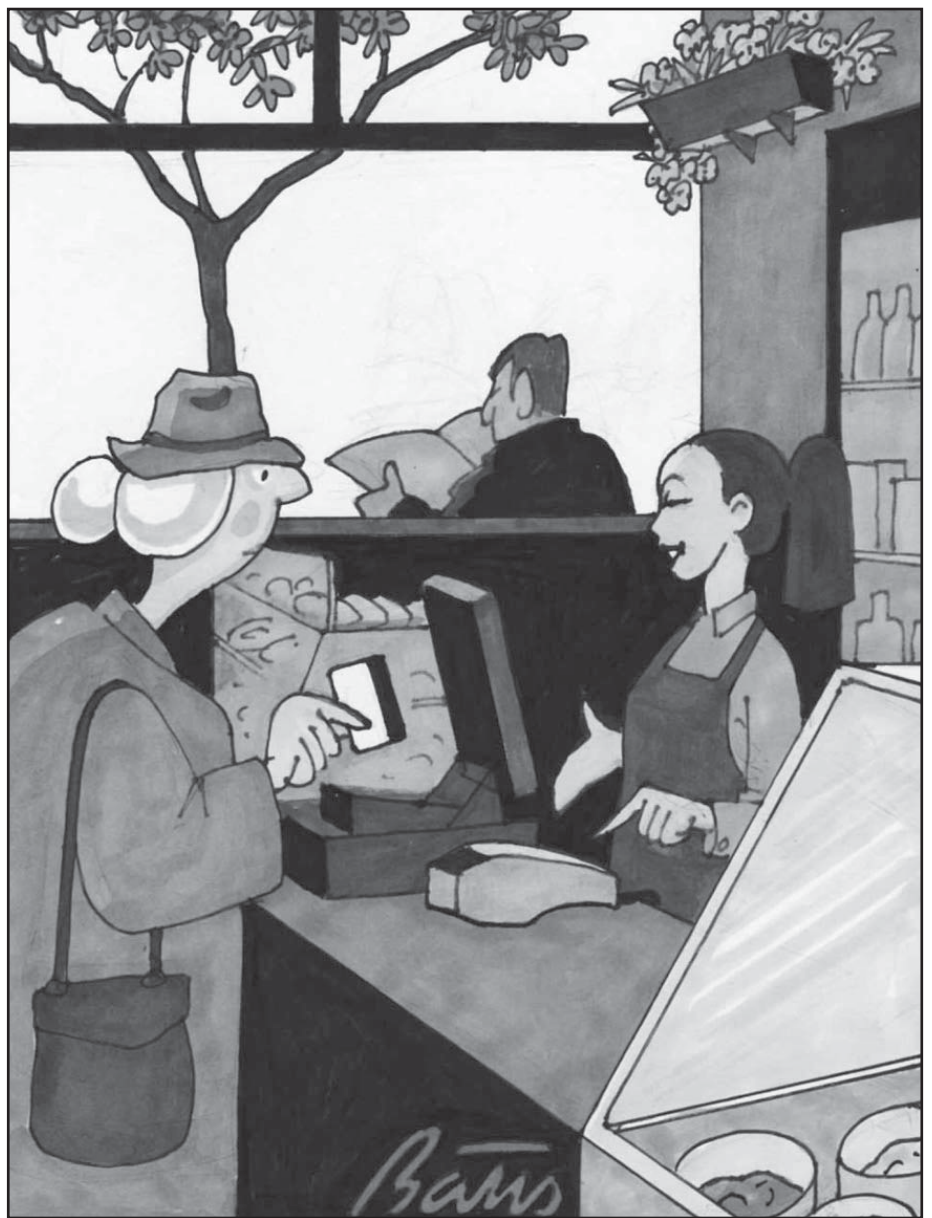

■ The Monterey Peninsula Water Management District is one of the agencies that is directly responsible for our water mess. For many years, it purposely tried to block any solution to the water crisis. And then it started acting more responsibly, trying to clear a path for the desal plant, and even developing a small new source — wastewater recycling — that's about to go online. But now, dark forces have emerged on the water board again, and it's even possible it will try to undo the progress that's been made.

■ Having said all that, the real fault lies with the California Legislature, which created all the bizarre laws that resulted in a cutoff of our water, alongside the contradictory ones that mandate we have an adequate supply while preventing us from getting one. As illustrated by our page-one story this week about the efforts the City of Marina is making to block our desal plant, it's state law that's causing almost all the problems and is encouraging Marina, among many others, to make trouble.

Global warming, if it occurs to any significant degree, will result in significant new rainfall. But that'll be no help to us, because we are barred from using most of the water that flows down the Carmel River.

Instead of more rain, we need a flood of common sense to descend on the people in the state capital so they'll loosen restrictions on the water we already have and clear the way for us to use whatever we need from the sea.

Make wood fires permanent

Dear Editor,

One night in 2015, I walked along Scenic Road and looked down on Carmel Beach. I counted more than 100 fires. I saw thick smoke in the beams of car headlights. It was difficult to breathe. My eyes stung. I couldn't leave fast enough. The next morning, I returned to see charcoal all over the beach.

Thanks to the beach fire pilot program, this intolerable situation is history. Monitoring data show that we can have nine wood-burning fire bowls and excellent air quality too. The charcoal litter that was turning the beach gray is no longer. Considering that the program originally called for 26 bowls scalable up to 51 on peak beach-use weekends, nine bowls is a compromise that greatly favors those who want no wood-burning fires at all.

What's more, the current program is far more restrictive than what coastal commission staff expect. As they stated in a 2016 letter:

"We do not support an all propane alternative." This letter also says the city should provide 12 to 15 wood-burning fire rings and make them "available for use between the hours of 7 a.m. and 10 p.m. daily."

Wood fires are only allowed between 4 p.m. and 10 p.m. now. Staff opinions may differ from commissioner opinions, but since three different staffers have told the city to allow wood fires, expecting commissioners to disagree seems awfully chancy to me. If the program is appealed, we might be required to allow more wood fires than we have now and allow them for longer periods of time.

Let's quit while we're ahead. We know that we can protect air quality and the beach and continue our village's time-honored tradition of beach fires. It's time to end the pilot program and permanently allow nine wood-burning fire bowls.

'Lack of discussion'

Dear Editor,

As someone who attended the county planning commission meeting last week regarding the Cal Am desalination plant, I found the lack of discussion about this important project to be troubling. Public comment was limited to two minutes, though five minutes went to agencies and hospitality organizations, and

HELP CAN COME IN THE NICK OF TIME FROM THE MOST UNEXPECTED PLACES

LOTTE MARCUS' childhood started out like a chapter from a storybook. Born in Vienna of 1927, she was the only child of parents she said had "a wonderful marriage." They had a large extended family, and Marcus grew up swimming, ice skating, dancing and taking summer vacations in the mountains where she learned how to milk cows and work with goats. Although ripples of the Great Depression in the United States spread to post-World-War-I Europe, her memories were happy.

Then came 1938. That was the year of the Anschluss, when Nazi Germany invaded and occupied Austria. Marcus was an avid figure skater, but was told that because she was Jewish, she would never be allowed to skate for Austria and represent her nation.

Surreal

Things got darker, quickly. Her father's brother was sent to a labor camp, she said, "and they sent his body back after he died there." Her family lost close friends who tried to hike out of the country with someone they trusted. Instead, he shot them.

Meanwhile, Marcus' father — like many others — was trying to find a legal way to get out of Austria. He went from consulate to consulate, Marcus remembered, "and they refused and refused and refused" to give him visas. One day, he discovered there was a line at the Chinese consulate. The consul-general, a man named Ho Feng Shan, was issuing visas — at great risk to himself — against the orders of the Chinese ambassador in Berlin.

After the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor in 1941, they banned communication with the United States, and much of the flow of money to the Jewish community dried up. Margolis, however, negotiated with the Japanese to more or less leave the Jewish community alone, and according to historians, continued her fundraising efforts by turning to Russian Jews.

Then, Marcus' father got cancer and died within a year or two, at age 44. "I was 14 and I became an adult," said Marcus. She explained that her mother was an excellent housewife and mother, highly respected in Vienna, but she didn't have many marketable skills. Marcus said, "I taught English and I sold my hair," to make money.

She taught herself shorthand and typing, and earned a scholarship to a local private school. And her world shrank, as the occupying Japanese moved all the Jews into what became known as the Shanghai Ghetto, somewhere between 3/4 and 1 square mile in all, already occupied by thousands of Chinese.

Lotte Marcus (left) has been through a lot in her 90-plus years. Some of it could have been much worse if not for the father of her friend Manli Ho (right), who saved her and many others.

"We needed passes to leave the ghetto to work," or attend school, said Marcus.

"I was lucky," she continued. "I never got cholera and toward the end of the war, survived 18 bombings," air raids which the United States carried out against the Japanese. She learned that some of her extended family had been killed, but that her mother's sister made it to Belgium and her mother's brother made it to the United States, where he established a bakery in Mobile, Ala., and was able to sponsor Marcus and her mother.

"We went from drinking Champagne to being crowded in a roomful of 50 people," she recalled.

That 1938 voyage must have been surreal — leaving their home under persecution and spending almost all their money on a luxury ship, then arriving in Shanghai, where they discovered squalid, poverty-level living conditions.

Wealthy Jewish families had begun arriving in China in the early 1930s, so there was infrastructure and aid available to the newly arrived refugees. Marcus and her mother and father lived in one small room with no heat, and shared a bathroom with three other tenants. The community grew steadily until, by 1941, as many as 20,000 Jews were said to have fled there from Europe.

Meanwhile, Shanghai had been invaded and occupied by the Japanese, who were allied with Germany. This is where a second hero in Marcus' story — after Ho Feng Shan — emerges. Laura Margolis, a social worker from the American Jewish Joint Distribution relief society, had been among those providing some assistance with everything from language barriers to poverty and hunger.

After the war, Lotte worked in Shanghai for about two years, eventually landing a job at the American consulate. Still, she and her mother had to wait for an opening in the quota system — the United States would only let in limited numbers of immigrants from various nations, and for Austria, that figure was quite small.

They entered the United States in 1947

RUSTY CROFT remembers being pretty much the same person as a little kid that he is now, as a 48-year-old — but nowadays he gets paid to play.

"I was the youngest of four, plus my mom babysat for other families, so I was always trying to stand out in a house full of kids, trying to make the best thing in the sandbox, or build the coolest thing out of whatever Lego pieces the bigger kids left," he said. "I'd draw, I'd paint, I'd sculpt. I've always loved art. And my dad is a builder, so I think that's where the whole 3-D art thing came from."

That change of course resulted from an opportunity to show his sculptures over a three-week period at Carmel Valley's Testarossa Winery, where they were spotted by the proprietor and namesake of the Bryan Hillstrom Gallery in Carmel. Hillstrom was smitten and offered Croft a spot in his Dolores Street gallery.

A project in its early stages — most likely destined for Hillstrom's gallery — will eventually become a life-sized steel horse, weighing more than 1,200 pounds. He simultaneously will be creating a series of exotic masks — "really fun, playful pieces," he said — which will be shown in September at The

It was an absolute blast," said Croft, who sculpted sand in Costa Rica, Fiji, New Zealand, Thailand, Puerto Rico, Baja, Mexico, Palau, and 16 venues in the United States. "And the show also really legitimized sand art, not only for us but for others who do what we do. It changed our industry."

Since the Travel Channel series came out, a relatively small community of elite sand artists have been in high demand, paid good money to create their masterpieces in front of live audiences at fairs, festivals, private parties, promotions, and corporate events — a main source of income for Croft and Rademacher, who regularly conduct team-building workshops for companies like Google, Facebook and Yahoo.

Those gigs and others (they recently returned from a demo at the Phoenix Children's Museum) help pay the bills for Croft, a married father of three daugh-

Early settlers, speculators and a surveyor impressed with pretty girls

JUDGE FLETCHER M. Haight is not a name often heard anymore in this area, but he was one of Carmel Valley's most distinguished residents of a bygone era. In 1855 he acquired Rancho Cañada de la Segunda (which included much of Carmel Valley and the site of present-day Carmel), receiving the final decree on February 8, 1858. The 1860 census said his holdings included 200 improved acres and 4,200 unimproved. The total ranch lands were valued at $4,200; his livestock — 1,200 sheep and 28 swine — at $5,000. Haight also claimed four horses, two mules and four milk cows.

Whether the Haight of San Francisco's Haight-Ashbury district was named for the Judge, or his son Henry — the 10th governor of California — is open for debate. Regardless, Judge Haight was a distinguished jurist in three states as the country expanded.

The lure of the West

Born in Elmira, N.Y., in 1799, Fletcher Mathews Haight graduated from Hamilton College in Clinton, N.Y., in 1818. From 1820-1834 he practiced law in the township of Bath, N.Y., which is also where he began his family.

He had three children, including sons Henry and Dugald, with his first wife. After she died in 1827, he remarried and had six more children — one at Bath, and five more after they moved to Rochester in 1834. In 1835 he was elected to the New York State Assembly and was first nominated for a judgeship at Rochester in 1843.

Soon after, the opening of the West called and in 1848 he moved the family to St. Louis. His second wife died soon after their arrival. The older daughters looked after the younger children while Haight set up a law practice with sons Henry and Dugald, but when news of gold hit, Henry headed to California. In 1852 Dugald set out to join Henry in California but drowned near Panama en route. In 1854, Fletcher Haight moved the family to San Francisco and then to his new Rancho Cañada.

William Brewer, who surveyed California for the US Government in the early 1860s, took a member of his team. He called on the Judge at the rancho in May of 1861 and recorded in his journal that "Judge Haight is a fine old man, a man of much intellect, lives in a comfortable house, has with him two daughters, most lovely young women, of perhaps 18 and 22 years — pretty agreeable, cultivated, and sensible. I don't know when I have spent an afternoon so pleasantly. The dinner was good, not brilliant — Champagne was partaken of moderately. His library was well stocked with choice works. It was indeed a luxury to meet with ladies — the first time we had set at table since New Year's. We were decidedly pleased, and we think they were, for they are much isolated here. They had a fine piano, and one of the girls played well. He has a fine ranch, keeps about 1,200 sheep, much better animals than one generally sees here. We were so urged to stay for tea that we did and rode home by twilight."

History Beat

By NEAL HOTELLING

When he said "rode home by twilight," Brewer meant to his crew's encampment at Rancho Pescadero, a few miles away. Brewer had met the rancho's new owner, Edward Tompkins on his trip west.

Tompkins was an attorney who was recently widowed and had traded his ranch in New York for the 4,400-acre ranch on the Monterey Peninsula — sight unseen — ready to start a new life.

Tompkins invited Brewer to camp at his new rancho. The site they chose to camp was on the bluffs above Carmel Bay. "An artist" took a photograph of their camp near a leaning oak tree, one that could still be recognized on Pebble Beach Golf Links for several years af-through San Francisco and stopped in Los Angeles on the way to Alabama. While she was there, Marcus said, she was impressed by the movie studios and film lots. She stood in a phone booth, feeding in nickels, trying to talk her way into a secretarial job.

As she was about to give up, something told her to stay. She walked around one of the movie lots and ran into a woman who asked if she needed help. Marcus started to cry, explained her situation and how much she wanted to work there, and the woman hired her for MGM Studios on the spot.

Honoring a father

Her mother went on to Alabama, but Marcus said that after she'd made enough money at MGM, she brought her back to California to live.

While she was at MGM, she met Alan Marcus, who she would marry and stay with until his death in 2015. Together, they wrote numerous books, and Lotte was able to pursue an education. She said that Berkeley looked down on her Shanghai high school diploma and didn't want to accept her.

However, Marcus knew future treasury secretary and then-Berkeley student Michael Blumenthal. "Such a nerd," she remembered with a smile. They were about the same age and he had also spent years in the Shanghai ghetto, but had gotten into college with the same high school diploma as she had. He helped convince officials to admit her.

She earned her bachelor's from Berkeley, as well a master's degree in Mexico and a doctorate in psychology from the Independent University at San Diego. The Highlands resident was a psychologist until she retired several years ago, and said she's seen more than 1,700 clients. Unsurprisingly, she worked especially well with refugees and women.

In 2004, she got a phone call from someone looking for people like Marcus who moved from Germany to Shanghai. It turned out to be Manli Ho, the daughter of the man who'd issued Marcus' family's visa, most likely saving their lives.

Ho wanted to continue to honor her father's memory. He died in 1997 and in 2000 was named by Israel's World Holocaust Remembrance Center, Yad Vashem, as "Righteous Among the Nations," for his actions to save the Jews. Oskar Schindler, Corrie ten Boom and thousands of others are part of that group, commemorated by a garden and wall in Israel. Ho and Marcus have kept in touch and become good friends.

On May 2, Marcus was set to be the featured speaker at the County of Santa Clara's annual Holocaust remembrance ceremony. She still speaks with deep and obvious gratitude for those who helped her. "I was lucky," she told The Pine Cone, "to have known so many good people."

CROFT

Reef, a new cannabis dispensary at 1900 Fremont St. in Seaside that already has a highly unusual Croft sculpture on permanent display.

"I made them a coral reef — 43 feet high, 7 feet wide — which takes the place of security bars at their shop in a very decorative way," he said. "It's steel, and I installed it right into the façade of the building, and it's really beautiful."

Croft recalled being a high school student in Perry, Iowa, a tiny city between Des Moines and Ames, resolved to a small-town future, when a page in a geography book changed his life.

"I saw a photo of someplace in the Caribbean, and I vividly remember thinking, 'I'll never see that. I'm destined to live out my life in Iowa, work at the grocery store, do what I'm supposed to do,'" he said. "Nothing wrong with that — it works great for a lot of people — but I remember feeling sad."

So he escaped what he foresaw as a dull future, fleeing to Park City, Utah, where he got his kicks as a snowboarder and began to dabble in art. He painted houses, not only the traditional way ("always a painful three or four days — just soul-sucking," he said) but sometimes in art deco style. He also discovered he had a talent for creating ice sculptures, which he made for private parties, openings, and events like the Sundance International Film Festival.

"I had an adventurous girlfriend there, and one day she said, 'We should move to the Caribbean!' So four years out of high school, I moved to the American Virgin Islands — the same island I'd seen in my geography book — with $200 and a bicycle."

That's where Croft, just 22 years old, essentially became a full-time artist, an occupation that has sustained him professionally ever since. The Caribbean also is where Croft traded snowboarding for windsurfing and scuba diving, and it's where he discovered sand sculpting, a talent he added to his tool belt four years later, when he relocated to San Diego.

"I feel incredibly fortunate that I made the decision at such a young age to go full time as an artist.

"Now, 26 years later, I have the skill level, the confidence, the experience, and the professional contacts to make it all work. The network I have today is just phenomenal," Croft said. "I have three daughters to feed today. I just couldn't afford the time to learn if I tried to do it now."

'Creative bombshell'

Those daughters, by the way, are also artistic. Olive, 17, is an illustrator. Ruby, 15, is a nationally competitive contemporary dancer. And Pearl, 10, has multiple talents, including painting and sewing.

For all of that, Croft heaps credit on his wife, Natalie Taggart ("a creative bombshell," he said), who got her own art education at the Rhode Island School of Design and the Academy of Arts in San Francisco. Taggart, a former teacher at Tularcitos elementary, is director of the Cachagua Children's Center. She teaches photography, sewing, clay, ceramics and mixed media arts.

A wide variety of Croft's sculptures can be found at rustycroft.com, and examples of his most recent work can be seen at Bryan Hillstrom Gallery (Dolores Street, between Fifth and Sixth avenues) in Carmel.

Stevenson's track specialists push limits and break records high and low

CONSIDER THIS: There are 34 schools from three counties (Monterey, San Benito, and Santa Cruz) in the new Pacific Coast Athletic League — the largest league in the Cen-and 12 other teams.

Mobley — who, by the way, also holds the PCAL's second-fastest time in the 200 (26.88 seconds), and runs a leg on Stevenson's 4-by-100 relay team (third-best in the PCAL at 52.14) — was just one contributor in a memorable team effort.

Indeed, historians might have to search back to Mt. Olympus to find a performance like the one turned in that same day by the top scorer at the meet, Anna Watson. The sophomore began her busy day by winning the 1,600-meter run with a personal record of 5 minutes, 16.55 seconds.

"It was cold and windy, and if the weather had been better, Anna might have broken our school record," said Ron Provost, who is in his 20th year as a track coach at Stevenson. Stephanie Stewart set the record (5:16.15) in 1998 — 21 years ago. If Mother Nature is friendlier at the PCAL Masters meet (3 p.m. Friday, Pacific Grove High), Watson likely will etch her name on the record board for future generations to admire.

Breaking the tape in the 1,600 a full 16 seconds ahead of her nearest pursuer was only Chapter 1 for Watson, who followed up by winning the 800 in 2:23.55 — also a personal best — five seconds ahead of the field.

Burning lungs

"She has a very smooth stride, and she's such a competitor. There are times when, as a coach, I might say, 'Anna, let's try to run an easy 1,600, so you've got a little bit left later in the meet,'" Provost said. "But she just doesn't have the ability to do that. She runs hard every time, in every race."

That's why the coach didn't hesitate to enter her in a third race, the 3,200 — two miles — in which Watson added another gold med-tral Coast Section — and most of them have a track team. The fastest girl, Trinity Mobley, a junior, is from Stevenson School, a private boarding school in Pebble Beach with fewer than 500 students.

Mobley's quickest time this year in the 100-meter dash, 12.88 seconds, is one-tenth of a second quicker than the PCAL's second-best clocking of the year, 12.98, by Julie Foley of Salinas (enrollment: 2,600), which is just one remarkable truth about 2019 track and field team at Stevenson.

Mt. Olympus?

One week ago, the 24 athletes on the girls squad won the first-ever league or division track championship in history of a school that was founded 67 years ago. The Pirates won the PCAL's Cypress Division crown on April 26, piling up 133 points to outdistance second-place Pacific Grove (115.5) al in 12:13.55, finishing 10 seconds in front of the crowd.

(Left) Trinity Mobley, the front-runner in this pack, is a junior known for her quick start. She is also the fastest 100-meter sprinter in the PCAL this year. (Right) Sophomore distance runner Anna Watson won the 1,600 (setting a personal record in the process), the 3,200 and anchored the second-place 4-by-400 relay team at Friday's Cypress Division Championships to lead Stevenson to its first team track crown.

And then, presumably with her lungs still burning, Watson stepped up in the very next event of the meet, sprinting the anchor leg for the Pirates' 4-by-400-meter relay team, which took second place in 4:28.17.

Team victory

Stevenson also boasts the fastest 100-meter hurdler in the three-county area, Kyla Cotton — another sophomore — who smoked off a 15.99 clocking earlier in the year. Cotton, a boarding student from Sacramento, set the school record in the high jump (5-foot-1) in 2018, and equaled it this year, and is the PCAL's fourth-fastest sprinter in the 200 (26.94), a personal record she set last week despite battling nagging injuries.

Mobley, the 100-meter lightning bolt, ran with Dana Diniz, Jessie Merenda, and Rose Akcan on the Pirates' 4-by-100 relay team (third-fastest in the PCAL), which won the Cypress meet with a time of 52.14.

But Provost attributed the team crown to the exceptional depth of this year's squad, also crediting team co-captains Maya Forgas (400, high jump, shotput), a junior, and senior Belle Kreitler (400, 300 hurdles) for their contributions. Indeed, the Pirates scored points in all 16 events.

"At the end of that meet, we talked about the fact that this was a team victory, not a set of individual accomplishments," the coach said. "And that includes our boys team, which placed third (behind Monte Vista Christian and Pacific Grove in a 12-team field). We see ourselves as one program."

Among the top performers at the division meet for Stevenson's 27-athlete male squad was senior Thomas Yang, who won the long jump (19-9), just ahead of teammate Adrian Sze (18-11), and the two reversed positions in the high jump, an event in which Sze cleared 5-10 and Yang went 5-8, (short of his season-best effort of 6-1.5, which is the top mark in the Cypress Division this year).

A freshman, Evan Johnson, placed second in the 100-meter dash (11.64), junior Max

Green was runner-up in the 400 (53.59), and two Stevenson relay teams — the 4-by-100 (Sze, Charles Du, Johnson, Guido Davi) took third place, and the 4-by-400 team (Marshall Boen, Davi, Green, Win Metcalf) took third place.

Davi, a junior, was second in the pole vault (10 feet).

"The turnout we got for track this year — 24 girls, 27 boys — is as big as I've ever had during the 20 years I've been coaching at Stevenson," Provost said. "There have been years when we've had only 12 athletes on the roster, boys and girls combined, so this year has been a lot of fun. This group of kids is very dedicated, and they work for the team, not just themselves.

"We try to promote a philosophy that combines fun with personal improvement," he said. "Something I've always harped on as a coach is that the first person you compete with is yourself. It's all about getting better and better."

Champions all

The top athletes from all three PCAL divisions — Gabilan, Mission, and Cypress — will converge upon Pacific Grove Friday (May 3) for the annual Masters meet, which will determine who qualifies to compete at the Central Coast Section Championships on May 11 (semifinals) and May 17 (finals).

Carmel's girls won the Mission Division championship behind individual champions Kandace Kimes (100), Cosima Cristofalo (200), Gianna Dalton (400), the 4-by-100 relay (Cristofalo, Lauren Pritchard, Isabelle, Silverie, Sarah Graessley), the 4-by-400 relay (Pritchard, Ashley Gose, Rachel Suess, Dalton), the shot put (Soana Laulotu), high jump (Pritchard).

Santa Catalina's Laurel Wong, the reigning state champion, won the pole vault.

Carmel's boys were second to King City at the Mission Championships, with individual titles going to Finnian Vogelpohl (200), Hunter Heger (high jump), Michael Meheen (pole vault), and the 4-by-100 relay team (Nick Sloan, Benicio Cristofalo, Lavar Edwards, Rashaan Ward).

Classical guitar icon from Cuba visits Sunset, rock star joins local chorus

GUITARIST AND Grammy Award nominee Manuel Barrueco celebrates the music of Spain and his native Cuba Sunday, May 5, at Sunset Center. The concert is the final offering of the Carmel Music Society's 2018-2019 season.

One of the world's most respected classical guitarists, Barrueco was nominated for a 2007 Grammy Award as "Best Instrumental Soloist Performance" for his composition "Solo Piazzolla." When he was just 22 in 1974, he became the first classical guitarist to ever win the prestigious Concert Artist Guild Award.

Just 7 when communist revolutionaries toppled Cuba's government, he immigrated with his family to the United States when he was a teenager.

At Sunset Center, Barrueco will play music by Spanish and Cuban composers, including Héctor Angulo, Ignacio Cervantes, Enrique Granados and Isaac Albéniz.

Booking Barrueco was a coup for the Carmel Music Society, explained Peter Thorp of the nonprofit, who called him "one of the most important guitarists of our time."

"It was a long shot to get him to come, but we asked, and he agreed," Thorp said. "I told some guitar friends we had booked him, and they said, 'How did you get him?'"

The concert starts at 3 p.m. Tickets are $45 to $60. Sunset Center is located at San Carlos and Ninth. Call (831) 625-9938.

The Carmel Music Society's 2019-20 season opens Nov. 13 at Sunset Center with a concert by pianist Olga Kern.

■ Singers welcome Spring

The lead singer of Toad the Wet Sprocket, Glen Phillips joins The Wholehearted Community Chorus when it performs its Spring Concert Friday at the Big Sur Grange Hall and Sunday at the Pacific Grove Performing Arts Center.

"He's a close friend," said Lisa G. Littlebird, who founded the local choral group in 2008. "He's been leading song circles in Santa Barbara. I proposed a collaboration, and he was stoked."

Littlebird called Phillips "an incredible songwriter."

"He'll be in front of the chorus with his guitar," Littlebird explained. "We will do eight of his songs, and he will sing lead vocals."

Not only is bona fide rock star joining the chorus for the concert, but so will those in attendance. "We get the audience singing with us, and this concert will be no exception," Littlebird added.

Friday's concert starts at 7 p.m. Tickets are $10 for adults and free for kids. The Grange hall is located just off Highway 1 about 25 miles south of Carmel.

A singer for Toad the Wet Sprocket, Phillips had a handful of hits in the early 1990s, including "All I Want," which peaked at No. 4 on the pop charts.

Sunday's performance begins at 3 p.m. Tickets are $25 for adults and $5 for kids. The theater is located at 835 Forest Ave.

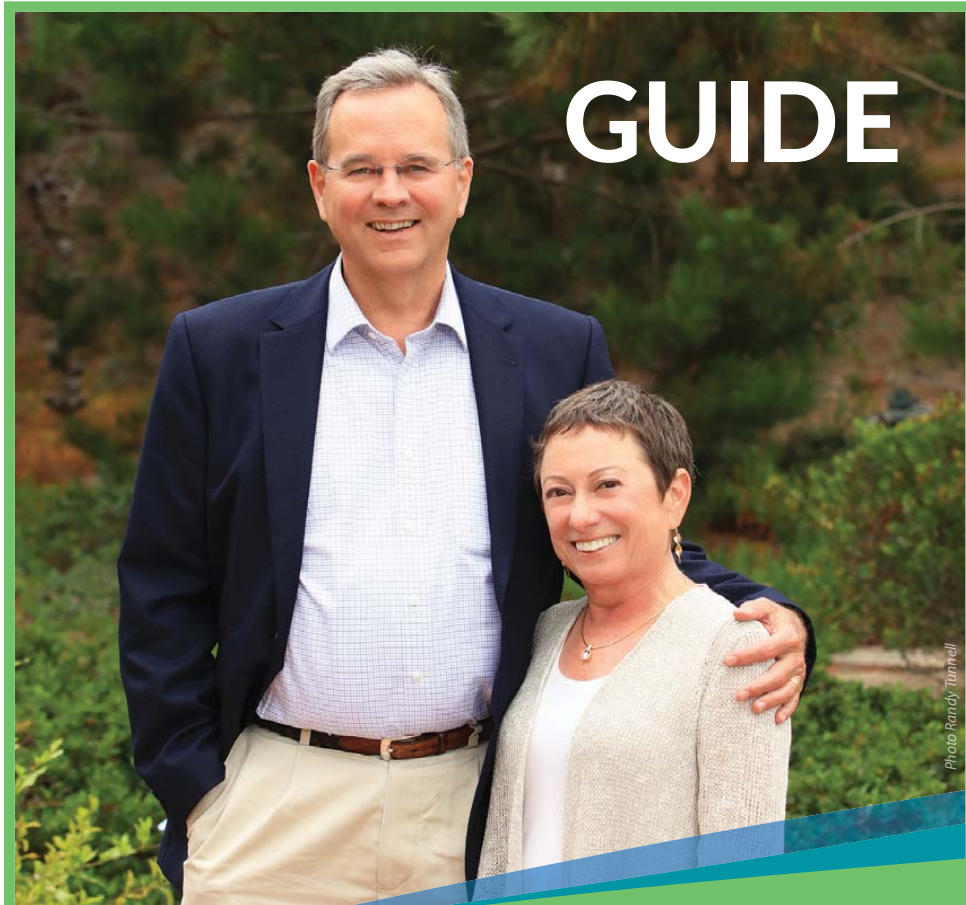

Also presenting its spring concert is another choral group, I Cantori di Carmel, which performs Saturday at the First United Methodist Church in Pacific Grove and Sunday at All Saints' Episcopal Church.

Titled, "Expressions of the Heart," the program includes music by Bach, Palestrina, contemporary American composer René Clausen and many others.

SLH Gala offers rare sips, PW v. Paulson in Chef Duel, and a Gala by the Bay

THE WINERIES of the Santa Lucia Highlands — a grape-growing region in the Salinas Valley that's particularly well known for chardonnay and pinot noir — will be pouring their best at their annual gala, this year called "Sun, Wind & Wine," May 18.

And new this year, a few wineries are hosting events before and after the big party to add to the festivities and draw more attention to the SLH Wine Artisans, an organization representing those making wine from the region's 6,400 acres of grapes.

"We wanted to get more people involved and create other opportunities to connect people with the growers and vintners," explained executive director Gwen McGill.

As a result, a barrel tasting of Gary Francioni's highly regarded Roar Wines and a kickoff reception at Seventh & Dolores Steakhouse, both set for May 17, have already sold out, but tickets remain for the main event and for a brunch the day after hosted by the owners of Morgan Winery at their Double L Vineyard.

"The brunch is a great opportunity to be on the ground at the vineyard, get a tour, and enjoy delicious wines," McGill said of the brunch, which will be presided over by owners Dan and Donna Lee, who started their winery in 1982.

The al fresco brunch in the vineyard — accompanied by Morgan wines, of course — will take place from 10:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. May 19. Tickets are $75, and Double L Vineyard is located at 1520 River Road.

More than 40 wineries

The gala the night before will probably sell out in the next week or two, McGill said. It takes place May 18 at Mer Soleil, a winery that's not typically open to the public, from noon to 3 p.m. and will have more than 40 members pouring some of their favorite chardonnay, pinot noir and syrah.

For many of the smaller producers, the SLH gala is the one public tasting they do each year.

Signed on to pour are August West Wines, Belle Glos, Bernardus, Bruliam Wines, Caraccioli Cellars, Cattleya, Cima Collina, Clarice Wine Company, Folktale, Hope & Grace, Hahn, Integrity, J. Lohr, J McFarland, Joyce, Kori, Kosta Browne and Luli.

Also Mansfield-Dunne, Manzoni, McIntyre, Mer Soleil, Miner Family Winery, Mooney Family, Morgan, Odonata, Pessagno, Pisoni, Puma Road, Rexford, Roar, Sarah's Vineyard, Scheid, Siduri, Talbott, Ten Acre, Testarossa, Tondre Wines and Wrath.

Member wineries also donated rare "big bottles" for a silent auction that will benefit the SLH Wine Artisans and the Rancho Cielo Youth Campus.

"We are excited to have them there presenting a dish this year," McGill added. Numerous other restaurants and food purveyors will be participating, too.

General admission is $120 per person, and $65 for designated drivers. Transportation is available from Monterey for $35.

Tickets for everything can be ordered through Eventbrite.com, but no pets or any Kristen McIntyre's family vineyard will be among those at the Santa Lucia Highlands "Sun, Wind & Wine" gala May 18. The event celebrates the region and those who cultivate grapes and make wines there.

■ PigWizard v. Paulson in Chef Duel

Folktales Winery's Chef Duel will have its semifinal round, pitting Jonathan Roberts the PigWizard against Yeast of Eden executive chef Stephen Paulson, in the winery's Barrel Room May 6 from 6 to 9 p.m. Roberts, who opened his long planned restaurant and deli on Cannery Row, is a creative, inventive and resourceful chef who continues to garner high praise, while Paulson continues to push the envelope at the new Carmel microbrewery and restaurant with bold flavors and combinations in a continuously changing culinary lineup that draws inspiration from all corners of the globe.

During the Chef Duel, each contestant is given a protein that must be used, along with four optional ingredients that earn extra points if they're incorporated in the winning dish. The audience and the judges enjoy watching the chefs cook onstage, sample the results, and vote for their favorite. In the event of a tie, when the crowd votes one way and the judges another, an additional challenge is presented as a tie-breaker. The whole event is emceed by executive chef Todd Fisher, and Folktale chef Danny Leach will cook and sell food, too, so nobody goes hungry. Cash bars will be stocked with wine, beer and soda. The winner will face chef Estevan Jimenez from Rancho Cielo and Sophina Uong from Piccino in the finals.

Tickets are $25, and only people age 21 and older are allowed. Order through Eventbrite.com. Folktale is located at 8940 Carmel Valley Road.

■ Book now for Red Cross dinner

The local chapter of the American Red Cross will hold its annual Farm to Table dinner at Carmel Valley Ranch June 2 from 2:30 to 7 p.m., when it will honor World Central Kitchen as its 2018 Disaster Response Partner. Based in Washington, D.C., World Central Kitchen was founded by celebrated chef José Andrés after the Haiti earthquake in 2010 with the "belief that food can be an agent of change," and the organization has evolved into a group of chefs seeking to develop "smart solutions to hunger and poverty," through health, education, job creation and social enterprise.

Much of the organization's work focuses on feeding people in the wake of the huge disasters where the Red Cross is busy at work, too, including last year's devastating wildfires and mudslides in California, where World Central Kitchen chefs prepared 350,000 meals for victims, firefighters and volunteers. Since "Heroes Feeding Heroes" is the theme of this year's Red Cross dinner, organizers said, World Central Kitchen was the ideal choice.

Dinner will begin with a tasting reception featuring local wineries, breweries and distilleries, and jazz from The Brian Fitzgerald Trio. Executive chef Tim Wood of Carmel Valley Ranch will oversee the family-style feast with help from chef/owner Fabrice Roux of Roux and the Carmel Valley Chophouse, and chef Soerke Peters of Etats-Unis and Mezzaluna, and each course will be paired with local wines.

Roux's wife, Jennifer, is chairing the dinner, which will conclude with a live auction to benefit Red Cross programs and services in Monterey, San Benito and Santa Cruz counties. Tickets are $200 apiece or $1,800 for a table of 10, and a portion is tax deductible. To purchase, visit redcross.org/FarmtoTable or call (831) 626-5255.

luncheon at the Monterey Peninsula Country Club's Beach House May 16.

At the Gala by the Bay, guests will be treated to the "stunning natural and artistic beauty of the Monterey Bay" at the aquarium, which they will have all to themselves for the night. The gala includes a gourmet sit-down dinner with wine, a live auction, and plenty of live music, of course. All proceeds benefit the Music for the Schools initiative. Tickets are $250 per person.

The luncheon at the Beach House will start at 11:30 a.m. and will include guest artists who will be performing in the concert a few days later. It will start with no-host cocktails, followed by lunch at 12:15 p.m. and a presentation by the guest speaker at 1:15. The cost is $50 per person. For more information and to order tickets, visit www.montereysymphony.org/special-events.htm.

Spring at Dawn's Dream

Dawn's Dream Winery, owned and run by Dawn Galante with an added goal of supporting worthy nonprofits, will host its annual Spring Fling at Galante Vineyards winery in Cachagua May 11 from noon to 3 p.m. with live music, food and wine pairings, barrel tastings, food from Crossroads BBQ, and big raffle gift packages. Five of Dawn's Dream's seven wines will be poured, and guests will have a chance to purchase six bottles for 30 percent off. This year's featured nonprofit is the Special Olympics. Seats on the bus to and from the event at the winery are $20 per person, and tickets are $40 per person. (Wine club members get two tickets for free.) Reservations are required. Call (831) 659-2649 or email wine@dawnsdream-winery.com.

EJ is ACF's Chef of the Year

The Monterey Bay Chapter of the American Culinary Federation will honor chef Estevan "EJ" Jimenez of Rancho Cielo's Drummond Culinary Academy as its Chef of the Year during a gala at the InterContinental Hotel on Cannery Row Sunday, May 19.

Jimenez, a perpetually warm and approachable chef with a talent for creating great food and teaching others to do the same, oversees the culinary academy at the youth campus in Salinas where at-risk kids learn skills that will serve them well in the hospitality industry and keep them out of the criminal justice system.

Also set to be honored that night are Arroyo Seco Winegrowers as Purveyor of the Year; retired Monterey Superior Court Judge Michael Fields, who is receiving the Humanitarian Award for his work through Monterey Kiwanis to organize the annual Community Thanksgiving Dinner at the Monterey Fairgrounds, and Pine Cone reporter Mary Notables of the culinary industry like Montrio executive chef/partner Tony Baker (right) and wife Tara, and photographer and US Foods district sales manager Bill Cox (center) have been honored at the annual ACF gala and awards.

Schley, who is receiving the President's Award from Monterey Bay Chapter President Soerke Peters and has written this column every week for 11 years.

The 45th Annual President's Gala will start at 5 p.m. with hors d'oeuvres and sparkling wine, followed by the awards, silent and live auctions benefiting the Marc H. Vedrines Scholarship Fund.

Executive chef Matt Bolton, who runs the kitchen for the hotel and its C Restaurant + Bar, will prepare a four-course dinner.

Tickets are $145 per person and can be ordered at www.acfmontereybaychefs.org.

 This organization is supported in part by a grant from the Arts Council for Monterey County.

CVA gallery presents:
"Meet Will Bullas"
 Sunday, May 12th ~ 11am - 5pm

Will Bullas + Carmel Valley Art Assoc.

BOOK-ALIKES BY WILL BULLAS

At 1:30 pm, Will is having a short, but lively introduction of his new artistic explorations which he has trademarked, "BOOK-ALIKES". They have the appearance of a hardbound book, but with an interesting twist as only Will can twist "it". Some, obviously funny, some just plain stupid (his words), but all are from that weird place born of Will's creative mind...his "delicious diversions". Surely these unique one-of-a-kind art pieces will become collector pieces. "BOOK-ALIKES are a must see!

Will is also planning on a "sneek peek" at the piece he created for this year's upcoming 2019 Carmel Bach Festival Art Raffle Fundraiser to be held at the Sunset Center.

Mobile master ‘fine tunes’ his style, unveils his latest ‘floating’ creations

Mobile artist Laurent Davidson's "Lemon Cello" is one of three exhibits opening May 4 at the Carmel Art Association.

IN HIS latest show, "Fine Tuning," opening Saturday, May 4, at the Carmel Art Association, sculptor Laurent Davidson pushes the boundaries of an underappreciated art form — mobiles — he discovered when he was a child.

"I treasure his pieces for their gracefulness," Sally Aberg of the Carmel Art Association told The Pine Cone. "They just float in the air like they're suspended on a gentle breeze."

As a boy growing up in France, Davidson lived next door to Alexander Calder, the sculptor who is credited with pioneering the mobile as an art form. The youngster made his first mobile at 12 after spending a day in Calder's studio watching the master work.

While his work is influenced by Calder, it moves beyond simply imitating it.

"I really admire what he's done beyond Calder," Aberg said. "He's modified his shapes, and added colors Calder never played with. His greens are simply scrumptious."

Not only are Davidson's mobiles unique and beautiful, they are durable and engineered for function and longevity. Aberg said that wasn't always true of Calder's work.

"He's a perfectionist," she said of Davidson.

He also has a long line of artists in his family tree, including his grandfather, sculptor Jo Davidson, whose bronzes and marble sculptures of world leaders and celebrities earned him much recognition in the early 20th century.

The CAA gallery unveils two others shows, this weekend, including painter Stan Robbins' "Coastal Delights," and a group printmaking exhibit, "Print 2," which includes works on paper by Jennifer Anderson, Susan Giacometti, Kathryn Greenwald, Noro Partido, Alice Geller Robertson and Pamela Takigawa. The lat-

POLICE LOG

FRIDAY, APRIL 19

Pacific Grove: Juveniles contacted on Ocean View Boulevard out after curfew at 0041 hours. Released to parents.

Pacific Grove: Child Protective Services report on Locust Street.

Pacific Grove: Dispatched to a report of vandalism on Sunset Drive.

Pebble Beach: A construction trailer on Riata Road was burglarized.

Carmel Valley: A Sky Ranch Road resident reported items stolen by her electrician. Statements from both parties indicated this case to be civil. This report is for informational purposes only.

Carmel Valley: A male reported that his credit cards had been stolen from his vehicle on Center Street.

SATURDAY, APRIL 20

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Report of a vandalism to miscellaneous property on Rio Road.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Report of theft of a credit card and cash from a vehicle on Dolores Street. Investigation is ongoing.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: A dog left its owner's yard on Carpenter Street and bit a passing pedestrian, causing a small puncture wound.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: A wallet was found on San Carlos Street and turned in to the police department at 2344 hours. A possible owner was texted due to the late hour.

Pebble Beach: Deputies responded to a report that a person had died at an Ondulado Road residence.

Carmel area: A couple on Mt. Devon Road got into an argument over child custody issues.

Carmel Valley: Deputies responded to a report of a neighbor hearing the sounds of a fight on Village Drive.

One by one, families have found their idea of paradise
at Teháma.

T E H Á M A

C A R M E L

For some, paradise is an inspiring architectural home perched high above the Carmel Valley with far-reaching views of Monterey Bay. For others, it is a masterfully-crafted residence secluded amid century old oaks and towering pines. For all who call Teháma home, it is living in a last-of-its-kind community — where 85% of its nearly 2,000 acres is preserved as open space, conservation and sustainability are a way of life, world-class amenities seamlessly sync nature and nurture, and the very best of Carmel and Monterey are just moments away.

Homesites 5 to 24 acres. Pricing from $1.5 million.
Nearly 70% of Teháma's 90 homesites now sold.

First they came for Kate Smith — and now they are coming for me

MANY THANKS to everyone who wrote to me about political correctness going too far when the New York Yankees and Philadelphia Flyers banned Kate Smith's "God Bless America" from their games. Since that column appeared, the Flyers removed Kate's statue from the front of their arena. Ah, the City of Brotherly Love. I hope they don't remember that Rocky beat up a black man.

We can express our disapproval over what those two professional teams did to Kate Smith, but her Big Brother-like airbrushing from history really doesn't affect us in a personal way. Now the PC craziness has spread its tentacles to go head-to-head with me. Well, not me exactly, but certainly persons of my genre. Let me explain.

The Library Journal is a trusted publication for librarians and has more than 200,000 subscribers. Melvil Dewey, who created the Dewey decimal system, founded the magazine in 1876. Recently, it provided a link to a blog written by Sofia Y. Leung, who described herself as an "academic librarian" and listed "intersectional feminism," social justice and cats as things she likes.

Leung wrote that most publications found in libraries "are written by old white dudes writing about white ideas, white things, or ideas, people, and things they stole from POC [People of Color] and then claimed as white property." She went on bashing "whiteness" and then declared, "library collections continue to promote and proliferate whiteness with their very existence and the fact that they are physically taking up space in our libraries."

So there you have it. I am an old, white, male. Admittedly, I have no publications in any library, but that's just a temporary aberration. I am working on a travel book called, "Venezuela on 5 cents a day — bring your own toilet paper." And I do take up space in the library, but only when I fall asleep reading had. Our own Harrison Memorial Library is one of the crown jewels of our community. Now, because of I am a member of the "old white dudes" club, Leung may be pushing for separate entrances and drinking fountains for my fellow old white dudes and me when we patronize the library.

Banning books

I cannot say with any certainty that Leung is proposing the destruction of books or banning of books. We have a tendency to think books cannot be banned in this country, but Amazon does it all the time.

Given today's political climate, it is not unheard of for leftist groups and even members of the media to profess racist, anti-white ideology and scream racism when their own beliefs are questioned or are met with disagreement. Whacky ideas really do become mainstream.

I never thought a nation's right to protect its borders by controlling immigration would be looked upon as racist. I'm sure many Americans thought the 18th Amendment was too whacky of an idea ever to be enacted. I never thought marijuana would be legalized. I didn't support the 26th Amendment because I don't think 18 year olds should be allowed to vote, and now there is serious discussion about allowing voting at the age of acne.

See GERVASE page 14RE

blogs like Sofia Leung's.

I suppose the importance of Leung's writing is somewhat moderated because she is writing a blog rather than appearing in a mainstream journal. Nonetheless, a very prestigious publication saw fit to reference her thoughts and give them a distribution much wider than they would have normally received. The Library Journal's adoption and propagation of what can only be construed as a racist analysis should be of concern to everyone.

I love libraries. My summer job as a library page when I was in my teens foreshadowed my journey into good literature and certainly impacted my life as much as any job I've

Libraries are community centers and should be repositories of the ideas that have shaped us into a free society whether or not we agree with those ideas. The skin tone or age of those authors should not even be part of the discussion. Unfortunately, like the despicable lyrics of other songs that Kate Smith sang in the 1930s, things were once quite different in our country. We were a nation dominated by people and the ideas and philosophies of European immigrants.

In my opinion, Miss Leung is a whacko. Undoubtedly books and ideas of old white dudes will not be weeded out of libraries. But then, Germans in 1933 probably didn't think books by Jewish authors would be subjected to temperatures of much greater than 451 degrees Fahrenheit. Hmm. Maybe it's time I began memorizing some of my favorite old white authors. I think I'll start with Charles Dickens ... "It was the best of times, it was the worst of times ..."

HOUSE OF THE WEEK

On a tree-lined, quiet street away from the crowds at the center of Carmel, you will find this 2,410 SqFt spacious, ocean view cottage within an easy walk to the village's shops or to the beach. The entire upper level is a master retreat with fireplace, ocean views, French doors leading to a private balcony and a spa-worthy bath. Two guest rooms are on the other side of the house and there is a fourth loft-style bedroom off the kitchen area.

Another 'Misty' house on the market, along with a mission knight's home

THE OCEANFRONT home at 162 Spindrift in the Highlands sold last September for almost $8.5 million. Part of its appeal was that it was Dave Garver's (Clint Eastwood's) house, from which the unhinged Evelyn Draper (played by Jessica Walter) fell to her tage where Draper lived in the movie is on El Camino Real near 13th Street, and it's listed at $1,895,000. The two-bedroom, two-bathroom home is described as "just 300 steps to Carmel Beach," with "vibrant oak floors."

The cottage was built in 1933. It is quite cheerful inside, despite its fictional occupant's decidedly dark leanings. Skylights, white-painted walls and ceilings make optimal use of the light from outdoors.

Two wood-burning fireplaces are ready to help warm the home when the sun doesn't cooperate. There's a built-in BBQ grill in the kitchen, and the house has an attached garage.

Compass is a relative newcomer to the area, but it's a national real estate company with offices in prestigious markets nationwide, including Santa Barbara, the Hamptons (on Long Island), Aspen and Dallas. Realtors Dana Bambace, Mark Peterson and Melissa Radowicz make up the local team, bringing their combined years of local experience to the firm.

Downie's ranch

Meanwhile, Bill Blume at Keller Williams has listed the Sir Harry Downie House, an "excellent example of the California Ranch style" at 24416 San Marcos, for $2,329,000. Dating to 1940, the house — which Blume said Downie built with the winnings from a poker game in Castroville — is 1,800 square feet and has three bedrooms and two bathrooms. It's situated on a 9,000-square-foot lot.

Downie, who died in 1980, was a cabinetmaker who took a great interest in restoring the Carmel Mission, which had fallen into ruins after the missions were secularized in the 1830s.

Photos from the late 1800s show an almost-roofless, empty façade. After the missions were returned to the Roman Catholic Church, Father Angel Casanova was able to replace the roof, preserving the interior until the 1930s.

Downie had a reputation for exceptional work with Spanish antiques, and in 1931, Monsignor Philip Scher hired him to restore a few statues. Instead, Downie spent nearly the rest of his life restoring the entire mission and its grounds. For his efforts, he was knighted by the Catholic church and by King Juan Carlos of Spain.

Ironically, after Downie's death, his own ranch home fell into disrepair. When it was purchased by new owners in 2003, it had rusted windows, was overrun by weeds and had cracked plaster.

But just as Downie had seen the beauty in Carmel Mission, the home's new owners recognized the "hidden treasure" in his home. They preserved the original design — and the oaks that lived on the lot — while adding more than 500 square feet.

So, whether it's a piece of movie history or real history you'd like to own, once again our little village has plenty to offer.

"We have been repeat clients of David Crabbe's since 2009. He helped us buy and sell two homes and we are now currently hunting for a new one with him. David is knowledgeable in all areas of real estate - from purchasing a home, listing a home, deciphering inspection reports or suggesting improvements, David has always been helpful. We trust him and his expertise in such an important purchase and will continue to refer to David in any real estate transaction."

"Police Log" Carmel Valley, May 27

Report came that a couple was in the bushes near a local restaurant.

The reporting party felt the female might be in some danger.

Sheriff talked to the couple.

Hello...

It turned out the woman wanted to be in the bushes with the man.

There was nothing to worry about.
