AG aims felony charges at former city worker

■ Accused of stealing medical benefits

By MARY SCHLEY

DEANNA ALLEN, who worked in finance and served as deputy city clerk before being fired in April 2018, was charged with three felonies by the California Attorney General's Office last week for allegedly embezzling and misappropriating funds from the City of Carmel and falsifying public records. The charges stem from a 10-month investigation by former city attorney Glen Mozingo and CPA Bryan Copas after Maxine Gullo, now assistant city administrator, discovered suspicious activity while reviewing payroll systems shortly after she was hired in 2016 to handle human resources.

In charge of payroll

As part of her job, Allen, who turns 46 this month and has since moved to Paso Robles, was in charge of payroll and other aspects of city finance. According to the felony complaint filed Aug. 28 by supervising deputy attorney general Brett Morris on behalf of California Attorney General Xavier Becerra, Allen stole money from city taxpayers in 2015 and 2016 by manipulating the city's computer system to provide medical benefits for herself and her family without paying for them. In the filing, Morris said Allen also stole, removed, destroyed, altered or falsi-

Critical hearing nears for desal plant

■ Coastal commission permit needed

By KELLY NIX

AFTER SEEMINGLY endless discussion, studies, analyses and legal battles over a proposed desalination plant that would offer the Monterey Peninsula a droughtfree water supply, California American Water is eyeing the ultimate prize: A green light from the California Coastal

This rendering depicts Cal Am's proposed desal plant, including storage tanks, pressure filters, administrative offices, a building for reverse osmosis filtration and one for water treatment, and a large brine pond.

Commission.

With several recent wins for Cal Am, including Monterey County's approval of a pump station in Carmel Valley and a victory in the state Supreme Court against a Marina water agency that's trying to stop the desal plant, Cal Am spokeswoman Catherine Stedman said the water utility is preparing to make its case to the coastal commission, which has the final say on the project.

"We have literally been discussing applications, proposals and reports for decades," Stedman told The Pine Cone. "And to be here, about to begin actual construction on a project, and only a matter of months away from our final approval, is a huge accomplishment for our community."

Expecting November

The private water utility's application for a permit for the 6.4 million-gallonper-day desalination plant near Marina could go before coastal commissioners before Thanksgiving.

"We don't know for sure yet, but we are preparing for a November hearing" in Half Moon Bay, Stedman said of the meeting. "Certainly, November is important in keeping on our overall schedule to have the plant built and operating at the end of the cease and desist order in 2021."

Cal Am, according to an order from the State Water Resources Control Board, needs to start building the desal plant by Sept. 30 to avoid water cutbacks that could translate to rationing by its customers.

Stedman said the utility needs a few small permits in addition to the coastal commission's OK, but that "it's fair to say that the coastal commission permit is the last major permit" the company needs for the water project.

Cal Am will tout the slant wells it's proposing that would draw seawater for the desal plant, technology that avoids entraining and killing fish and other marine life. The coastal commission required Cal Am to pursue the method.

Construction uncertain at Dolores and Fifth

By MARY SCHLEY

A CONTRACTOR is gearing up to build the mammoth mixed-use project at Dolores and Fifth that stalled out six months ago, leaving a vast 16,000-square-foot pit on the edge of downtown, but there's still no indication when — or if — work will resume on the contemporary-style, side-by-side, multi-story complexes.

Fundraiser to aid resident's fight against illegal campfires

By CHRIS COUNTS

HAVING SEEN up close the devastation wrought by wildfires and fed up that illegal campfires were proliferating in his neighborhood, Big Sur resident Brendon Shave decided to do something about them. With equal parts pa-nce and persistence Shave has spent much of his summer driving along the back roads of Big Sur's South Coast and talking to tourists about the dangers of starting illegal camp-

The effort got started earlier this summer after he happened upon an informal campsite with what he called a "raging campfire" and nobody around.

He put the fire out using the absent campers' own water, and when they returned to the site, explained to them what he had been forced to do.

But the campers swore they had put the fire out earlier. So Shave, who has lived in Big Sur for eight years and is the son of blogger Kathleen "Big Sur Kate" Novoa, chael Draper, the complexes designed by architect Erik Dyar will have underground parking, retail and commercial space on the ground floor, and condos and a couple of low-income senior apartments on the upper stories. The original plan was to build on the property on the northwest corner, but when the building next door went on the market, Leidig-Draper Properties bought it, too.

The old buildings were demolished in summer and fall of 2017 and in early 2018, and excavation and construction of the underground garage proceeded, often at a snail's pace, until it stopped altogether in March. Because the project doubled in size, Dyar explained at the time, the partners had to seek new financing and construction bids.

After months with no action and little news, this week, there appears to be some progress toward resuming construction, with the rehiring of Stillwater Construction, the local company owned by Dan Silverie Jr. that worked on the first phase, and the hiring of his father's firm, Silcon Construction. Dyar said they are collaborating.

$20 million

Silverie said his company got the contract to build the complexes, which are called Del Dono Court 1 and Del Dono Court 2, and that he's now "assisting the owners in financial information and budgets on specific products and value engineering ideas."

"The total construction budget is nearing $20 million, and that's not an easy task, especially with the develop-

RECORD NUMBER OF STEELHEAD RESCUED

By CHRIS COUNTS

WHILE THE word, "rescue," generally means something's awry, there's a big silver lining in the news that more than 26,000 young steelhead have been rescued from the shrinking tributaries of the Carmel River this summer.

Carmel Cowboy

The Carmel Pine Cone

THERE IS no coastal stretch in Dallas, no arc of white sand framing a bay, no gulls overhead, no little crabs scurrying into the brine. So, the first time Cowboy encountered Carmel Beach, he hardly knew what to do with himself. He ran around in the sand, not really forward, his person said, but sort of up and down, with his puppy ears flapping in the wind.

It was on Carmel Beach that he figured out how to dig far enough down into the sand to bury his head. Once he got the hang of the place, he learned how to sprint back and forth, kicking up spray along the shoreline. Still, when the waves rushed in, he got scared and dashed away.

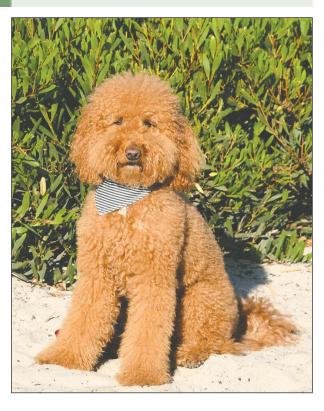

Cowboy is a 3-year-old goldendoodle who was born in Arkansas, but is growing up in Dallas.

"I'm not from Texas, but I wanted I wanted a Texan name for my dog because I love Texas and love living there," his person said. "I considered Cowboy, Lonestar, Ranger, Maverick and Whiskey. Cowboy

His person, who graduated from Baylor University in 2013, is a private wealth investor in Dallas who hops on a plane with Cowboy every time her family convenes here for a holiday by the sea.

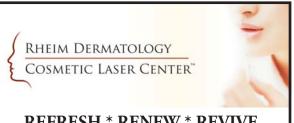

"He's social that by the time I settle in, with Cowboy at my feet, everyone greets him by name as they head to their seats. He's the plane mascot," his person said. "The flight attendants just love him."

By Lisa Crawford Watson

Cowboy's person wasn't going to get a dog until she got married. But there he was, this tiny puppy at the breeder, wearing a small blue and white striped necktie, like a little man, going to work. She couldn't resist.

"My husband's on the horizon," she mused. "I just haven't met him."

Council poised to face off with wireless company over cell towers

By MARY SCHLEY

VERIZON WIRELESS wants to install five new cellular sites in neighborhoods at the south end of town, but the planning commission refused to approve the antennas in June, so Verizon's lawyers and executives will ask the city council to overturn that decision at its Sept. 10 meeting in city hall.

The telecommunications company has its work cut out for it, though, since senior planner Marnie Waffle outlines in a 16-page report all the reasons the new cell towers would violate city laws and therefore cannot be approved.

The company wants to install antennas on top of five PG&E poles located on San Antonio between 10th and 13th avenues, on Lincoln and Mission streets near 12th, and on 10th just north of Dolores, extending their heights to up to 50 feet from their existing 29 to 38 feet. While some federal and state laws limit local jurisdictions' control over the installation of telecommunications equipment, Waffle recommends in the report she'll present to the council Tuesday that it uphold the planning commission's denial based on conflicts with the general plan, zoning code and other guidelines.

Lots of approvals

The installation of the new cellular equipment project needs several different city permits in order to proceed, and to approve just one of them — the use permit — means satisfying eight specific requirements. Failing to meet just one would be cause for denial, and according to Waffle, Verizon's application fails to meet seven, including that it comply with the general plan and zoning code, that it won't set a precedent, that it won't be injurious to public health and safety, that it fits in with the surrounding uses, and that it won't negatively impact the area.

While some residents strongly oppose the installation of wireless facilities for what they claim are health reasons, federal law "precludes a jurisdiction from making a decision based on health or environmental concerns if the RF emissions meet federal standards," Waffle notes.

Waffle says the towers wouldn't meet various residential design rules, either. She also doubts they would satisfy the requirements for getting an encroachment permit, which is needed for any private use of public property. Verizon claims the new towers would benefit the public by increasing cell service at the south end of town, but Waffle says even that might not provide an adequate justification — because a lot of the houses are empty.

"According to the most recent department of finance projections, Carmel has a housing-stock vacancy rate of 37.7 percent," she notes. "A significant portion of the housing stock is vacant for the majority of the year, and a growing number of homes are second homes and not the primary residence of the owners. As a result, the actual benefit of the wireless service within the proposed geographic area is unknown."

Laws enacted to protect wireless communications state that a company can overcome local rules and denials if they can prove an "effective prohibition" is preventing the company from providing adequate service. In her report, Waffle says Verizon's efforts to prove denying the five cell sites in the residential area would "significantly impair" its ability to serve its customers are inadequate.

Also at its Sept. 10 meeting, the council is set to decide on several other big issues.

Library Corner

We are back, dear Readers! It has been a few years since we were here in the pages of the Carmel Pine Cone bringing you recommended reads and rousing tales from our village by the sea.

In her 1925 book Carmel at Work and Play, Daisy Bostick describes the Carmel Library as an "efficient medium for the distribution of books" AND a place where "you will undoubtedly meet at least a few of your friends and exchange cooking recipes or make an appointment for a game of bridge."

Carmel Public Library is still a social center in town today, and that is one of the best parts about working at the library (besides being surrounded by all of the world's knowledge). We love chatting with you, our library patrons, about the newest book or DVD, pondering and researching the interesting questions that you pose, and seeing you make new friends over the jigsaw puzzle in the reading room.

We are looking forward to being back in the pages of the Pine Cone each month. Stay tuned for the Community Read, "Stump a Librarian" and more!

Verdicts, pleas and sentencings announced by Monterey County District Attorney Jeannine Pacioni

Aug. 5 — Christopher Montoya, 33, a resident of King City, pled guilty to murdering Daniel "Duke" Martinez and personally using a firearm in the commission of the murder.

On Sept. 3, 2018, Montoya and three others went to a house in Salinas to purchase marijuana. Montoya, while holding a .38 caliber revolver in his hand by his side, knocked on the back door of the house. The victim, who was a guest at the house, opened the door and he and Montoya began to argue. The confrontation turned physical and the victim hit Montoya one time before Montoya shot the victim in the head. After a period of time, residents of the house called 911. Salinas police officers arrived and despite the attempted life saving measures, the victim was declared deceased at the scene. The residents of the home were uncooperative with police and their investigation.

Nine days later, on Sept. 12, 2018, California Highway Patrol got into a chase on Highway 101 in Salinas, with speeds reaching 130 miles per hour, with a black BMW matching the vehicle associated with the murder that occurred on Sept. 3. The occupants of the BMW threw a handgun out of the vehicle. The Federal Bureau of Investigation examined the revolver and concluded that the revolver was the firearm used to kill the victim on Sept. 3, 2018.

Montoya will be sentenced by Judge Rafael Vazquez to 18 years-to-life in the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation.

Aug. 8 — Jesse Anthony Sanchez, 54, of Moss Landing, was convicted of one count of attempted auto burglary, one count of theft, one count of loitering, and one count of battery. Judge Mark E. Hood presided.

On March 2, Sanchez went to a strawberry farm just north of Castroville. When the farm laborers worked their way into the fields, far from their parking area, the defendant drove onto the property and began to rummage through their vehicles.

Sanchez taunted the laborers by shouting at them from the parking area and broke the door handles off a vehicle he was unable to gain access to. He fled the scene before the laborers were able to return from the fields to confront him

On May 2, Sanchez returned to the same farm and removed several items of property from parked vehicles. On this occasion, he was caught in the act by the vehicle owners, who were closer to the parked cars than he realized. Sanchez threw a full can of soda — stolen from one of the victims' lunches — at the worker that confronted him, striking the worker in the shoulder. Sanchez then abandoned his own vehicle and fled the farm on foot before being arrested by Monterey County Sheriff's deputies.

Sanchez faces a maximum sentence of 4 years in the Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation

Survey offers opportunity to sound off on Mid-Valley makeover

By CHRIS COUNTS

AFTER TWO recent public hearings on the proposed remodel of the The Marketplace @ Carmel Valley — formerly known as Mid-Valley Center — the Carmel Valley Association wants more comments on the topic.

At hearings in July and August, many residents expressed concerns over owner Russell Stanley's plans.

"An ad hoc committee of the Carmel Valley Association agreed to produce this anonymous dozen-question survey to learn how the community responds to proposed changes," Walton said. "The answers will be shared with residents at an upcoming Carmel Valley Association forum and used to inform the owner and the county as the process goes forward."

Accompanying the survey are images showing what the shopping center would look like if the renovation get approved and is completed.

Responses are anonymous. People can find a link to the survey at carmelvalleyas-sociation.org.

The shopping center's makeover includes adding outdoor seating areas, a bocce ball court and a fire pit. The work also includes removing a 1,638-square-foot breezeway, painting the exterior, and other changes and additions.

"This well located and established neighborhood shopping center will be transformed into a vibrant outdoor shopping destination for daily needs and lifestyle essentials," reads a brochure about the shopping center. "An ambitious remodel is planned and will include reconfigured retail spaces, updated facades and inviting outdoor gathering areas."

But the site was red-tagged by the county over unpermitted painting.

The shopping center was designed in the mid-1960s by the late architect Olof Dahlstrand, who also designed Carmel Plaza and other important local buildings. As a result, some contend the Carmel Valley shopping center should be designated historic, which would make it more difficult to make changes to it.

Flanders, city attorney on agenda

AT A closed-door meeting Monday afternoon, members of the Carmel City Council will tackle a substantial agenda that includes appointment of a new city attorney, labor negotiations and real estate talks, along with several lawsuits.

The session, which will start after council members return from a tour of inspection that begins at 4 p.m. Sept. 9, will open with contract negotiations with police officers, ambulance workers, general employees and management.

Council members will then get updates on a few court cases, including Chilone Payton's ongoing legal battles with the city, along with one matter of "anticipated litigation."

They are then set to talk about rent and other terms of the nonprofit Carmel Youth Center's lease, consider appointment of the next city attorney, and negotiate with "prospective residential curators 1 and 2" regarding restoring and living in the deteriorating and decades-vacant but historic Flanders Mansion, according to the agenda released this week.

After all of that, the council will reconvene in open session to hear public comments, if any. For more information, visit www.ci.carmel.ca.us.

Homeowner sues over color of neighbor's roof

By KELLY NIX

A SEASIDE homeowner is so offended by his neighbors' white roof that he's filed a civil lawsuit in hopes of forcing them to change it to another color, according to a complaint filed in Monterey County Superior Court last Michael Jones, who along with his wife, Stephanie, lives on the east side of Highland Street, says his neighbors on the west side of the street, George and Yoko Hoffman, remodeled their house in June and July. When the construction was over, the roof was white, a color Jones contends is not pleasing.

The problem, he claims, is that the white roof causes glare from the afternoon sun to shine into his house.

"Said glare and brightness necessitate plaintiffs to close their blinds, draw their curtains, shut their doors, and prevent them from enjoying the use of their front yard," according to the suit, which was filed for the Jones family by Monterey attorney Leigh Rodriguez.

"In addition, said glare and brightness prevent plaintiffs and guests with a clear, scenic and panoramic view of the Monterey Bay," according to the complaint filed Aug. 29. Although Jones says he tried "on several occasions" to discuss the problem with the Hoffmans, they "refused, and continue to refuse, to abate the nuisance."

The white roof of this Seaside house seems innocuous enough, but neighbors who lives across the street feel it's so offensive that they've filed a lawsuit to get rid of it.

Citing the pending lawsuit, the Hoffmans declined to comment on the lawsuit.

Jones alleges the Hoffmans told him they planned to sell their house and that the issue would have to be taken up with the new owner of the property. Jones notes that he's unsure whether the roof was painted white or the color is due to the material used for the roof.

In any event, Jones says the white roof is a nuisance and claims his neighbors have caused him and his family "stress" and their property value to decrease. Jones wants a judge to order the Hoffmans to change the roof and to award an unspecified amount in monetary damages.

Jones is also seeking punitive damages because he alleges the Hoffmans' conduct is "willful, oppressive and malicious."

Sheriff, district attorney, police departments defend handling of rape investigations

By MARY SCHLEY

THE MONTEREY County Civil Grand Jury says Monterey Peninsula police departments and the Monterey County Sheriff's Office aren't keeping track of "rape kits" — evidence collected after alleged sexual assaults — and don't share data about such cases or devote enough resources to investigate the crimes. But several agencies disagree with the conclusions drawn by the grand jury, which has no enforcement power but studies various community issues in depth each year and makes recommendations.

Last week, the Monterey County Board of Supervisors approved two responses to the jury's report, while the sheriff's office and the district attorney's office filed their responses to several more findings and recommendations Aug. 8 and Aug. 15, and the cities of Pacific Grove and Marina answered on Aug. 8. The Carmel City Council is set to finalize its reply at its Sept. 10 meeting, and the other cities have yet to respond, but their deadline isn't until Sept. 24.

Why look in the first place?

The civil grand jury decided to examine how rape kits are processed in Monterey County — which averages around 150 sexual assault cases a year, though the number is steadily rising — after national media reported widespread cases of destruction and backlogs of rape kits, and poorly conducted forensic investigations.

"The inappropriate handling of evidence in these critical criminal cases has impacted victims of sexual assault and public safety in general," the grand jury wrote.

Jurors conducted interviews and researched procedures and laws to determine how well local law enforcement agencies handle rape cases. Overall, they expected more sharing of information among them, and more coordination when it came to providing and analyzing data.

"Discussions with various agencies and individuals also pointed to the need for a local centralized system to monitor and investigate sexual assault allegations across jurisdictions," they said.

While the county contains 11 city police departments and the sheriff's office, jurors interviewed "leaders" in two law enforcement agencies and concluded none of them have enough trained investigators to handle sexual assault

cases

"The MCCGJ also learned that funding for training is constrained by budget limitations," they wrote. "Interviewees noted that training funds are often the last priority in the budgeting process."

Recommendations

Based on their research and findings, jurors recommended all law enforcement agencies in the county set up a centralized database so investigators can track sexual assaults countywide, develop a system to track rape kits, have more sexual-assault investigators, figure out how to get more tax dollars for high-level training, and report data on rape cases to their governing bodies and the public.

In general, those that have answered so far disagree with just about all the findings, except those that acknowledge law enforcement agencies are submitting DNA to the California Department of Justice for testing as they are supposed to and have implemented DNA testing protocols established by the DOJ, and say they are already complying with many of the recommendations.

They all disagreed with the grand jury's finding that they "provided unclear and inconsistent information as to whether there are any backlogged rape kits." "The sheriff's office wholly disagrees with this finding," Sheriff Steve Bernal wrote. "The sheriff's office does not have ANY backlogged rape kits."

The board of supervisors, the sheriff's office and the other agencies all said they prioritize budget funds for training specialists in sexual assault and that the California Commission on Peace Officer Standards and Training reimburses them for much of it.

Not enough investigators

Smaller agencies said they did not and could not have investigators dedicated to rape cases, since they don't have that many. Pacific Grove had eight rapes and eight forcible rapes in 2017, for example, and Carmel reported just one of each type. Marina had seven rapes, six forcible rapes and one attempted rape.

Regardless of the very low rate of sex crimes in Carmel, the draft response from Mayor Dave Potter and city

Hope that new trees will draw monarchs in droves

By KELLY NIX

IN RESPONSE to a dismally low number of monarchs at Pacific Grove's butterfly sanctuary last year, there is a new effort to set up dozens of trees in hopes of significantly boosting the number of the colorful insects that visit the tourist attraction.

Monarch advocate and P.G. resident Bob Pacelli has proposed planting more trees in the monarch sanctuary in hopes the insects will take to them. In 2018, only 740 monarchs clustered in trees there. In comparison, 17,000 monarchs clustered in 2017.

We will replace 20 to 30 trees that we moved to the monarch sanctuary over the last eight years," which the insects "clustered on but were lost to man and nature," Pacelli said in his new proposal to the city.

The cost to plant the eucalyptus and oak trees is estimated to be as much as $20,000. Councilwoman Jenny McAdams said there is talk of using private donations — instead of taxpayer dollars — to pay for the new trees, which would be brought to the sanctuary in boxes, as they were for Pacelli's first effort.

"There are hundreds of residents who are interested in helping by either contributing their time or money," McAdams said. "As that would be challenging for the city to coordinate," Pacelli "is willing to take this on as he did in 2010. I too have offered my assistance in whatever capacity needed."

In the fall of 2009, the city heavily pruned eucalyptus trees in the sanctuary at 250 Ridge Road, just before the monarchs usually arrive, a move Pacelli blamed for the low numbers that year. "The trimming reduced the 2009 Thanksgiving monarch count to 793," Pacelli said. "The 2008 Thanksgiving count had been 17,856."

Public works superintendent Daniel Gho said the idea would have to go before the city's beautification and natural resources commission at its Sept. 17 meeting.

"If they opt to proceed, I will then seek approvals from the California Department of Fish & Wildlife," Gho told The Pine Cone.

P.G. city manager will work remotely one day a week

By KELLY NIX

THE PACIFIC Grove City Council Wednesday voted 5-2 to OK an employment contract for its city manager that will allow him to work away from city hall up to four days per month.

Since being hired in 2016, Harvey has worked in Southern California several days a month under a verbal agreement with the city, and this week the council put the arrangement in writing.

"The city manager shall be authorized to work remotely up to one day each week," the new contract says.

The contract also says Harvey is supposed to try to make his away-from-the-office day the same day each week.

Harvey requested the arrangement when he started working in Pacific Grove so he could visit his children, who live

Agreement "transparent"

Council members Joe Amelio, Cynthia Garfield, Robert Huitt, Nick Smith and Amy Tomlinson voted to amend Harvey's contract and the work arrangement, while councilwoman Jenny McAdams and Mayor Bill Peake voted against it.

According to the council report, which was written by Garfield, Harvey has "successfully worked remotely" for more than three-and-a-half years. But she said his previous employment contract "did not include clear language" allowing him to do "It is the intent of the city council to continue to allow this already well practiced remote work schedule and to formally add clarifying language to the employment contract," the report said.

Even one of the opponents of the arrangement was glad it was finally in writ-

"I am disappointed that my colleagues do not share the same vision as I have for Pacific Grove regarding the importance of our city manager's presence in the city," McAdams said. "But I'm pleased to see the agreement he made to work remotely has become transparent to our residents."

Activist Luke Coletti has long been critical of Harvey's work schedule, claiming he has "taken advantage" by being gone more than one day per week.

"I believe Mr. Harvey's arrangement has been detrimental for our city and has fostered resentment among city employees," Coletti told the council Wednesday night. "Mr. Harvey is the only one who gets to enjoy this unsupervised and unaccountable arrangement."

However, Harvey got high marks during his performance evaluation, a process that has been ongoing for about five months. Although the details of Harvey's evaluation are confidential, Garfield's report said the "overall review was consistent among council members and overwhelmingly pos-

Harvey in 2017 earned $232,692.75 in total pay and benefits, according to a state salary website.

That same year, the council gave Harvey a $4,000-per-month "housing and transportation" reimbursement plan so he could fly to Long Beach on the weekends to see his kids, and a $500-per-month car

Flanders Drive residents, young girls, plead with drivers to slow down

By MARY SCHLEY

THANKS TO apps like Waze that give drivers alternate routes when Highway 1 is congested, and to locals who will do almost anything to avoid sitting in traffic jams, a narrow neighborhood road east of Carmel High School has become a de facto freeway, and so far, no one has been able to do anything about it, according to one worried res-

Flanders Drive loops from the east side of Highway 1 north of the high school to the south side, where it intersects with Morse Drive, which leads back to the highway.

These two Girl Scouts stood out on their street with a sign asking drivers to stop speeding. Their mom says it didn't work, unfortunately, though the CHS cross-country runners thanked them.

"The traffic is nonstop from 3 to 6 p.m. every night," said Lindsay Peelman, adding that some of the perpetrators are teens who attend Carmel High.

"We are all so fed up with it," she said.

Residents have contacted the California Highway Patrol and met with Monterey County 5th District Supervisor Mary Adams about the problem.

The CHP was sympathetic, Peelman said, but the agency told her its officers couldn't issue tickets without first having a speed survey completed.

Peelman said Adams and her public policy assistant agreed during a meeting with several residents last month that a survey is called for to help determine how to make the road safer. Peelman said she doesn't know when that will happen, though.

'Double and triple the limit'

"We are getting desperate," Peelman said. "Our kids ride bikes back here, people walk their dogs, the speed limits are posted, yet people constantly drive double and triple the speed limit." One cautionary sign warns drivers to slow to 20 mph for a bump, and the standard speed on residential roads is 25 mph.

During the afternoon of Aug. 15, after one of her

How 'manly peer pressure' led to a 63rd birthday in a Korean pool

By DENNIS TAYLOR

THE PASSING of three of his closest friends, all in their early 60s, stirred former Seaside Fire Chief Steve Prelsnik from what can only be described as a Rip Van Winkle-esque slumber, at least as far as sports were concerned. It turned out to be an awakening that led to one of the most rewarding experiences of his life.

Prelsnik celebrated his 63rd birthday last month in South Korea, where he was part of a team that won the World Masters Championship in water polo in the 60-and-older division.

The Santa Barbara Silver Surfers — who qualified for the world championships as U.S. national champions — went 7-0 in the seven-day tournament Aug. 5-11, beating Canada, Australia, Argentina, Spain, and Germany twice.

For Prelsnik, who retired as fire chief in 2012, the experience itself was more meaningful than winning a gold medal, particularly in light of the inspiration that took him there

"Losing my three good friends all at the same age was a wakeup call for me: Get out and play, live while you can live, don't let life pass you by ... just do it," said Prelsnik, who received a scholarship to play the grueling sport of water polo at the University of Arizona. "I had played water polo on and off since college, but basically had been away from the pool since 2006."

Shame brought on by "manly peer pressure" drove him to get back into the game, said Prelsnik, who lives in Pebble Beach. But the deeper reason, he confided, was confronting his own mortality after mourning his friends' passing.

Scott Hinman, a former standout at UC Santa Barbara, died in March 2017 of a heart attack while coaching at Irvine High School, where his swim team had won eight consecutive California Division 1 championships from 1997 to 2004 (and produced Olympic gold medalist Amanda Beard).

Hinman's former UCSB teammate,

Steve Ratzliff, served as master of ceremonies at the memorial service, then died just seven months later from a rare degenerative neurological disorder called multiple system atrophy.

Both had played alongside Prelsnik with the Santa Barbara Surfers.

A small community

And last October — one year after Ratzliff's death — cancer claimed Steve Martin of Soquel, an educator who had starred in water polo at San Jose Lincoln High and San Jose State, then coached the sport at five high schools, including Willow Glen, where Prelsnik had been his co-coach in the 1980s.

"Water polo is a small community — everybody knows everybody else — and guys kept saying, 'Dude, you've got to get back in the water," he said. "So, two years ago I finally did. And I played this tournament in South Korea in honor of those three friends who passed away."

Getting back in shape was the first challenge for Prelsnik. Getting up to speed with the 21st-century game was another.

"When I played water polo, we really didn't have positions. We had a goalie and we had field players," said Prelsnik, who played on a team at San Jose's James Lick High that placed second in Northern California in 1974. "So some of the stuff, like names of the positions and areas in the water, were a little bit foreign to me. Turns out, I'm an outside shooter and driver."

And although he had been a member of the 1998 masters teams that won a sil-

Beachgoer rescues bird

A TOURIST from New Jersey became an unexpected lifesaver Monday when she came to the rescue of a cormorant that was apparently drowning at Asilomar Beach.

Margo Pellegrino, 52, said she was poking around the water's edge just north of Asilomar when she saw people taking photos of some commotion in the water. She first thought it was a sea otter before realizing it was a cormorant struggling to stay afloat.

"I initially though it was tangled in fishing line," Pellegrino told the Pine Cone Tuesday. "You could see it was getting tired. It was definitely struggling."

Concerned the cormorant would drown, Pellegrino, dressed in jeans and a t-shirt, took off her shoes and got into the cold Pacific Ocean to save the seabird.

"I was focused on getting the bird without risking my life, because that would be pretty silly," she said.

'Would have drowned'

While the rescue was unfolding, Pacific Grove photographer Rory Merry happened to be on the beach, like he is most mornings, and started taking pictures.

"Margo is a brave woman," Merry said. "Judging from the time it took for the professionals to get on the scene,

Margo Pellegrino of New Jersey barely flinched when she took to the water off Asilomar Monday to save this cormorant, which the SPCA later said showed signs of poisoning from a natural toxin.

Doctors to give lessons on how to use opioid overdose rescue drug

By KELLY NIX

WITH THE aim of saving the lives of people who overdose on narcotics, Montage Health and several substance abuse groups are hosting an event in Marina this

Shakespeare's greatest adventure story comes to Circle Theatre

By CHRIS COUNTS

A PLAY that starts with a riddle and ends with redemption, PacRep Theatre's "Pericles, Prince of Tyre" opens Saturday, Sept. 7, at the Circle Theatre.

Written by William Shakespeare, the play tells the story of Pericles, who correctly guesses the answer to a bride-winning riddle, but is forced into exile by the consequences of his cleverness. Now on the run, he turns to his next best option and "embarks on a tempest-tossed quest in search of adventure and love."

"People call it Shakespeare's greatest adventure story," PacRep's executive director Stephen Moorer told The Pine Cone. "Epic is the best single word to describe it. There are a lot of trials and tribulations — it's the kind of story that is worth the payoff."

The role of Pericles is shared by two actors — Mathew Reich, who portrays our hero as a young man, and Justin Gordon, who plays him when he's older.

"Mathew is young, exuberant, strong and full of vigor — everything you would want in a young hero," Moorer said. "Justin is all of the above — just a little bit older."

The cast also includes Mike Baker, Patrick Andrew Jones, Jennifer LeBlanc, Scott McQuiston, Ben Muller, River Navaille, and Lindsey Schmeltzer, with many of the actors taking on multiple roles and some playing an eclectic assortment of folk, jazz and rock.

Ken Kelleher directs the play, while Schmeltzer serves as musical director and Keith Pinto takes on the role of movement director.

The play also showcases the charms of the Circle Theater, which is located adjacent to the larger Golden Bough Playhouse. "The intimacy of the theatre really adds to the experience," Moorer added.

All shows start at 7:30 p.m. except Sunday matinees, which begin at 3 p.m. Tickets are $10 to $38, with discounts available for students, teachers, seniors and active military. "Pericles" continues Thursdays, Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays through Sept. 22. You can buy two tickets for the price of one on Thursdays.

The Circle Theatre is located a block away from of the Golden Bough Playhouse on Casanova between Eighth and Ninth. Call (831) 622-0100.

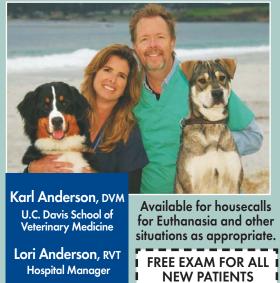

Next up for PacRep is a stage adaptation of the movie, "Shakespeare in Love." Also directed by Kelleher, the plays opens at the Forest Theater Sept. 28.

Staff on hand at the Sept. 7 Monterey County Overdose Awareness and Prevention Day will teach those without formal medical training to recognize signs of an overdose and to administer naloxone, a medicine which counteracts the effects of opioid overdoses.

The event is open to any county resident, especially those who might have family members or friends who are addicts. According to 2016 government statistics, 1 in 7 people in the United States is expected to develop a substance abuse problem. That amounts to about 62,000 people in Monterey County, which has a population of about 440,000.

"The likelihood that a person in Monterey County does not have contact with a person with addiction is low," Casey Grover, medical director of CHOMP's emergency department, told The Pine Cone this week.

Naloxone comes in a nasal spray and blocks the effects of opioids — such as heroin and legal prescription drugs oxycodone and hydrocodone — on the brain and can suddenly awaken someone and restore breathing.

Those who attend the awareness and prevention day will receive two doses of naloxone and training on how to use the drug. "Naloxone has reduced the number of fatalities," Grover said. "Overdoses are still coming in, but the number of those that are fatal has decreased. This is extremely important, as an overdose is often an opportunity to get people into treatment."

Grover said CHOMP treats about one overdose patient per day, though it's hard to tell how many are for opioids because most overdoses involve more than one drug.

"Over the past 10 years, we have seen a large increase in overdoses," Grover explained. "However, with many of our drug safety efforts, we are finally starting to see a decrease from our peak over the past one to two years."

The event, being held by Montage Health, Monterey County Prescribe Safe Initiative, Community Human Services and Valley Health Associates, is Saturday, Sept. 7 from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. at Monterey Bay Event Center, 249 10th St. in Marina.

Anne Rich Parker Dewees April 19, 1930 & August 22, 2019

Anne Rich Parker Dewees passed away peacefully on August 22, 2019, at the age of 89 years. Anne was born in Newton, Massachusetts on April 19, 1930. Born to Howard Leonard and Barbara Angier Rich, Anne attended Newton High School and graduated from Smith College in 1951. She married Howard Bruce Parker on October 17, 1953 and was married a second time to the love of her life, Alfred Dewees of Carmel, California on June 14, 1978. Anne is survived by her two daughters Betsy Parker Humphreys of Eliot, Maine and Susan Parker Adams of Barrington, New Hampshire; Trevor three grandchildren, Parker Humphreys of Poultney, Vermont; Avery Adams Clancy of Colchester, Vermont; and Madeleine Parker Adams of Portland, Maine; and two great-granddaughters, Nora Anne Humphreys and Ramona Joy Humphreys of Poultney, Vermont. She also leaves behind her brother, David Thayer Rich, her niece Catherine Rich Groh and nephew Matthew

A Memorial Service will be held on October 26th at 2:00 PM at St John's Episcopal Church, 101 Chapel Street in Portsmouth, NH. In lieu of flowers, memorial donations may be made to the Anxiety and Depression Association of America (members.adaa.org).

William Joseph Benech

William Joseph Benech, better known as Bill, 64, of Carmel Valley, California, died unexpectedly on July 24, 2019.

Born September 21, 1954, in Monterey, California, Bill was a life-long resident of the Monterey Peninsula. Bill started high school at Junipero Memorial High School and graduated Monterey High School in 1972.

He went on to attend Monterey Peninsula College before transferring to Northern Arizona University, where he earned a bachelor's degree in business administration in 1978.

After graduating college, Bill returned to the Monterey Peninsula and began a 33year career of construction with his business partner and best friend, Victor Ferrante.

Words will never be able to fully describe Bill. His friends and family remember him as a loving and caring man with a booming laugh that could be heard from a mile away. He could make a friend out of anyone and was truly selfless with his time and love.

Bill was predeceased by his wife, Christine Benech of Carmel Valley; and his father, Henry Benech Jr. of Monterey. He is survived by his daughter, Cara Benech of Carmel Valley; his mother, Mary Benech of Monterey; his older sister, Kathleen Benech of Carmichael; his older brother, David Benech of Monterey; and his younger sister, Janice Brown of Fullerton.

The family is holding a celebration of life on Saturday, Sept. 21, 2019, from 1 to 3 p.m. at the Trail & Saddle Club located at 85 E Garzas Rd, Carmel Valley, CA 93924.

administrator Chip Rerig states CPD's detectives always undergo all the necessary training for investigating sexual assaults, meet regularly with others in law enforcement to discuss cases, and are dedicated to investigating any reported incidents.

The grand jury also said the district attorney's office should, by next January, "initiate and take the lead in developing a centralized interagency method to post and track sexual assault occurrences, rape kit collection and reporting to facilitate investigations among all law enforcement agencies," but DA Jeannine Pacioni said her office would not do that, because the state department of justice is "the central repository for all DNA data."

Besides, some responders, including Carmel, noted, local police agencies and the district attorney's office meet monthly to coordinate their investigations of sexual assault cases, so there is, in fact, an organized effort to share information with each other, despite the civil grand jury's conclusion to the contrary.

But Pacific Grove Mayor Bill Peake agreed with the civil grand jury in acknowledging things could be better. "PGPD agrees improvements can be made to better share information and coordinate any investigations that may be occurring in other jurisdictions," he said.

"I rolled the video tape and they were shocked," he said. The campers learned a valuable lesson: "If you're not willing to put your hand in the coals of a fire, you know it's not out," explained Shave, who works at the New Camaldoli Hermitage.

For the most part, those who Shave has talked to about their illegal campfires have been polite and agreed to put them out, he said. His dashboard camera records such conversations, which goes a long way to encouraging civil discussions, since nobody wants to be caught flipping out in a viral video.

Some locals are quick to blame visitors for causing problems in Big Sur, but not Shave.

"We need to share Big Sur," he explained. "We just need to figure out how to do it safely. The real problem is that there isn't a lot of law enforcement. The word is out on social media that you can have fires, shoot guns and do what you want to do."

While law enforcement in Big Sur is stretched thin these days, Shave said the California Highway Patrol gave out a flurry of tickets and warnings in his neighborhood over the recent three-day weekend, and as a result, the number of illegal campfires quickly declined.

"There were 85 cars parked along Plaskett Ridge Road on Friday, and only 17 on Sunday," he reported. "That was really impressive."

Shave's efforts have drawn praise from many locals, including Domini Anne, who started a fundraiser on social media to raise money to cover the expenses Shave has incurred doing patrols. In just days, the campaign had raised more than $4,000 out of its goal of $5,000.

"Brendon pays for gas, for maintenance on his vehicle, he donates countless hours of his time a week to this cause, and he also could use some decent fire patrol equipment such as a drone and basic firefighting tools," she wrote. "Any donations to Brendon's cause will be gratefully appreciated."

DESAL

"We would be the first to not use an open ocean intake" for the desal plant and therefore "avoid harm to marine life by drawing water through the sand," Stedman said. "We think the state is looking for an example that desal can be done" using this technology, "and our project would certainly be an example of that."

But the innovative technology — which worked well during the testing phase will also be at the heart of the debate over

The City of Marina and its water agency, the Marina Coast Water District, will likely argue that the source wells would threaten the city's water supply.

Though the state's Public Utilities Commission in late 2018 certified a 13,000-plus-page environmental impact report for the desal project that took six years to complete, Marina contends there is "new information that shows the groundwater impacts from Cal Am's desal project would be substantially more severe" than those analyzed in the environmental review. It also argues that Cal Am doesn't have the water rights for the project.

Marina Coast Water District general manager Keith Van Der Maaten did not respond to a message from The Pine Cone seeking comment.

"We are hopeful that the coastal commission will understand the necessity of restoring the Carmel River and developing a sustainable water supply for our community," Stedman said.

"Our project follows every guideline for desal in California that was created by the coastal commission and other state agencies," she added.

Cal Am said the design work on the $329 million desal plant is complete.

Breaking ground

Before Cal Am can make its case to commissioners, though, the company will start installing a pipeline that will carry water roughly 9 miles from the desal plant to Seaside, where it will connect with another pipeline that was completed last year. The new conveyance system will travel along Charles Benson Road and under Highway 1 to Gen. Jim Moore Boulevard in Seaside.

This will be the second portion of the pipeline from the desal plant to Seaside,"

In 2018, the company completed a $50 million, 36-inch pipeline that runs 7 miles from Gen. Jim Moore Boulevard to just inside Pacific Grove's boundary near David If California American Water has its way, this empty field next to the landfill near Marina will be the home of the Monterey Peninsula utility's $329 million desalination plant.

ternet service on Carmel Valley Road and in the Jamesburg/Cachagua area.

A hearing was held Aug. 28 before Cachagua Area Land Use Committee. At the hearing, AT&T indicated they would consider reducing the height to 75 feet, but if they were required to lower it to 50 feet, it would not be feasible and they would not proceed. They also agreed to provide camouflaging as a pine tree. AT&T stated elm tree camouflage is not recommended because it does not provide as effective service and deteriorates rapidly, creating increased maintenance costs. Per AT&T, the tower would also be used by FirstNet to provide enhanced communication to law enforcement and fire personnel. Cachagua Fire provided support for the tower based on public and human safety and greatly improved emergency communications.

Opponents of the tower, although claiming to be concerned with public safety, complained it would be visible from seven-tenths of a mile away on Carmel Valley Road and a "shorter," unspecified distance on Tassajara Road, and would be visible from properties of a handful of neighboring residents. The opponents also dismissed pine tree camouflage because pine trees are not "native" to the subject site, instead recommending elm tree camouflage.

Following a question and answer session and public comment, while voicing concern for public safety, and after being informed AT&T would not proceed if limited to 50 feet, the LUAC unanimously voted to recommend limiting the height to 50 feet and camouflage as an elm tree, basically damning the project.

Apparently the LUAC and the opponents of the project are more interested in preserving their scenic views than protecting public safety. Are the aesthetic concerns of a few people more important to you than your personal safety and the safety of all people traveling through the Jamesburg/Cachagua area? Hopefully the planning commission and board of supervisors will place more value on protecting the lives and safety of the residents of this area than the views of a few.

created optimal conditions for steelhead to hatch and thrive in the river, making it possible for so many to be saved. In more typical years, an average of about 3,000 are rescued as the river recedes.

LeNeve's group — thanks to the efforts of nearly 50 volunteers — has rescued more than 16,000 young steelhead this summer, while the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District has saved more than 10,000 fish along Cachagua Creek, he reported.

Because the Sleepy Hollow fish-rearing facility is undergoing a big upgrade and is out of commission for now, some of the rescued fish were returned to parts of the river that won't be drying up anytime soon. Others were placed in the Carmel River Lagoon, where the water quality is very good due to high flows. "Everything we put in the lagoon should make it out to sea," he said.

Another factor contributing to the boom in the population of steelhead trout — a species which saw its numbers greatly decline in the Carmel River as more and more water was pumped out for human consumption — was that the wet winter created an optimal opportunity for adult steelhead to reach the river's distant tributaries to spawn.

"We had perfect conditions for adult migrations," LeNeve explained. "Any fish could swim upriver."

Rescues 'can't go on forever'

On the downside, LeNeve said as many as half the fish stranded in drying tributaries this year have perished, despite all the hard work by volunteers.

"We're lucky if we get 50 percent of the fish," he said. There's probably 16,000 that died."

LeNeve said the rescues are important to the survival of the trout in the Carmel River.

"If it weren't for the efforts of the water management district and the Carmel River Steelhead Association, every one of these fish would be dead - all 26,000," he ex-

While steelhead advocates are celebrating their recent success, they're also fixed on finding ways to improve conditions for the fish. LeNeve said coming up with more means of storing water — such as tanks and ponds — will go a long way toward reducing summertime pumping from the river. He said such measures have proved successful elsewhere in the state.

"We're trying to get more water in the river," he added. "There are just too many people pumping from it. The rescues can't go on forever."

Meanwhile, of course, Cal Am is trying to build a desal plant in Marina so that pumping from the Carmel River can be drastically curtailed. See page 1A.

Not a habit

SPCA spokeswoman Beth Brookhouser said the bird appeared to have a case of poisoning with domoic acid a naturally occurring toxin that accumulates in fish and shellfish. The organization's wildlife center took in the bird and stabilized it before handing it over to another group that specializes in birds.

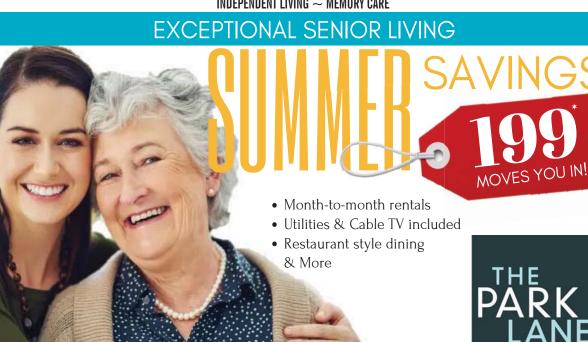

"We treated the cormorant with intravenous fluids and diazepam to control seizures and tremors," she said Tuesday. "The bird stabilized to a reasonable level and was safely transferred to our collaborators at International Bird Rescue this morning."

daughters was almost hit by a passing car as she got off the school bus, Peelman stood outside and videoed passing drivers. One drove so fast the tires squealed, and another passed dangerously over the road's double-yellow lines.

Her girls, 8-year-old Gretchen and 10-year-old Chloe, decided they wanted to help with the problem, so they stood next to the road holding a sign that read, "This is not a Route 1 bypass. This is \(\mathbb{G} \) where we live and play."

"Neighbors came out of their houses and stood in driveways pleading with drivers to slow down," she said. "The girls stood outside for hours with a sign asking people to

But most drivers either ignored them, taunted them, or even pretended to try to hit them, according to Peelman.

In particular, the driver of a red Ferrari "sped by and turned around to speed back by and blow past my daughter on purpose," she said.

Freeway to blame?

Other residents of the neighborhood also shared stories of scares involving their own children, as well as the deaths of numerous dogs and cats that were hit by cars on what has become such a busy road.

She blames some of the speeding on "local residents who should know better," and suspects navigation apps are responsible for the rest. She also shared an exchange with another parent who unapologetically admitted she is one of those speeders and blames Flanders Drive residents for helping to scuttle the Hatton Canyon Freeway Project that died nearly two decades ago after being fought over for many years before that.

"She said she was one of the speeding by-passers and she would not stop, and said it was our own fault," Peel-man recounted.

A fairly new resident, she said she didn't know what the other woman was talking about.

Peelman and her neighbors don't know what else to do, but she hopes making their pleas more public might help propel things forward.

"I'm hopeful they're going to make the survey happen, but we will see," she said. "Until then, it's still an awful situation every day for the high school runners, kids getting on buses, and anyone trying to walk a dog, ride a bike, etc. I just hope no one gets hurt in the time that it takes for them to decide if we will get a survey."

AGENDA

Council members will talk about how to word the March 2020 ballot measure that will ask residents to approve a new sales tax increase. In 2012, voters OK'd an extra 1 percent sales tax to help pay for public projects and pay off debt, but the tax expires in spring 2023, so the council wants to put a new, slightly higher tax, on the ballot before that happens. The 1.5 percent sales tax would bring in an extra $4.5 million annually for the general fund for the next 20 years.

Rentals

In addition, they're expected to again discuss, and maybe even act on, what's next when it comes to regulating short-term rentals downtown, since they are allowed in apartment buildings and the commercial districts. As he has several times in the past, planning director Marc Wiener will seek feedback from the council on whether the city should restrict transient rentals downtown and to what extent, and if so, how existing short-term rentals should be treated, whether there should be a numerical cap on them, and if a certain amount of new ones should be allowed as incentive for building affordable housing and more long-

The beleaguered topic of beach fires is also on the agenda for Tuesday. Wiener will ask the council to "reconsider, review and/or amend" the coastal development permit it approved a few months ago to limit beach fires to propane only. A group of residents asked the California Coastal Commission to void the permit, but last month, the council backed down on its plans to ban wood fires for a year, so the next step is to rescind the permit. Wiener said the council could also make minor or major changes to the temporary rules regulating beach fires, if it wants to. The rules will expire on Nov. 30, 2020.

For a full agenda and other information about Tuesday's meeting, which will begin at 4:30 p.m. in council chambers in city hall on Monte Verde Street south of Ocean, visit www.ci.carmel.ca.us.

ver medal in the 40-and-older division, and a bronze in the 45-and-older, he had never ventured too far from home.

That tournament was in Portland. I had been to Canada and Mexico. But other than that, I had never been out of North America," he said. "And a great part about this experience was we had two former members of the Australian national squad on our team, so we got to train and scrimmage in Australia for nine days before going to South Korea.'

Problem weather

The tournament at South Korea's Nambu University was played in near-triple-digit heat with 60 to 70 percent humidity — which are still a factor, even in a swimming pool — and team depth was a critical asset for the U.S.

"We were strong and fast, but our endurance wasn't there," he said. "We were in really good shape, but you don't last as long at 63 as you did at 23, so we were fortunate to have a lot of players who were threats throughout the pool, as opposed to one or two key guys. We basically could sub out the team in the water with another full lineup because of our depth. That's what made the difference."

The Silver Surfers — all former high-level college players — beat each of the six other teams during preliminary play, then defeated Germany again, 6-3, in the gold medal match.

Prelsnik scored four times and recorded multiple assists during the seven games.

"After the medal ceremony, there was a lot of camaraderie among the teams, which might be my greatest memory from the experience," Prelsnik said. "It wasn't like six teams from six countries were doing their thing in their separate pods — we were drinking beer and enjoying food together on the lawn, laughing and joking, feeling like we're all one world, rather than separate countries."

ment consisting of private ownership condominiums within the building element," he said. "We hope to be back under construction soon but are not sure exactly when."

Silverie said he and his crew have "years of understanding the complexities of building mixed-use projects like this."

'Working together'

His father, also named Dan Silverie, has done a number of significant projects in town, including Trevvett Court. On the Del Dono Court projects, he is helping with logistics, financial information and communication, among other issues, according to his son.

"I know the owners and the Silveries are working with different subcontractors and still negotiating pricing," Dyar said Thursday. "My understanding is they do not want to start up construction again until all this is in place."

Nearby business owners, public officials and others have complained about the slow progress on the complex-- which at one point were expected to be ready for tenants by spring 2020 — and were especially concerned when construction stopped altogether. But there's nothing the city can do to force work to resume, according to building official Dick Bower, who confirmed the Del Dono Court permits are still active.

"We can't read their minds or force them to do work. The building division is responsible for assuring they have valid permits and build their projects in accordance with the approved plans," he said. "The city doesn't prescribe a timeframe in which a construction project must be complete, only that they must keep their permits active by passing at least one inspection every 180 days or requesting a permit extension timely before expiration."

Planning director Marc Wiener explained that when permits lapse due to inactivity or failure to pass inspections, the property owners or builders must pay new permit

"In the case of the Del Dono project, the property owners indicated a few months ago that the project should be starting up again soon," he said. "We sincerely hope that is the case, as we would like to see this project finished as soon as possible."

Wrapping up permits

Dyar said he and his team recently completed "some minimal value engineering and are wrapping up the full construction and building permit documents for the second building." While Del Dono 1 has all its permits, and the garage that will be under both buildings does, too, he said, "this final permitting will complete the required permits for the project in its entirety."

Regardless, when, or if, Leidig-Draper will get the necessary financing to start work again and complete the project remains to be seen.

One of the worst?

m MOST}$ OF the surveys and studies that show up in the news media — you can recognize them by any story that begins, "according to a recent survey," "according to a study" or "according to a report" — are meaningless to the point of absurdity, usually because they're generated as part of a self-serving campaign to get more funding, promote a cause or try to get the public to think it's supposed to be worried about something. Nevertheless, reporters seem to fall for them all the time.

A good example was the silly designation by an environmental group several years ago of the Carmel River as the "most endangered river in America." The idea was ridiculous, of course, and all you needed as proof was the fact that the year before and the year after the Carmel River was listed as "most endangered," it didn't even make the Top 10.

All the designation really meant was that somebody in Monterey County asked the group to declare the Carmel River "most endangered" that year, so it did.

Just this week, another absurd survey garnered national headlines when an organization called "Internations" reported that the United States is ranked one of the worst places in the world to call home, at least according to a survey of people who live outside the borders of their native lands.

The survey included questions about quality of life, healthcare, cost of education, family life and finances. The result: Of 64 countries on the list, the United States was 47th. The Top Ten were Taiwan, Vietnam, Portugal, Mexico, Spain, Singapore, Bahrain, Ecuador, Malaysia and the Czech Republic.

Of course, one slight problem with this survey is the fact that the United States is the No. 1 destination for refugees and would-be immigrants from around the world — and we don't just mean the thousands of poor and destitute from Mexico, Central America and even Africa who are at this moment crowding our southern borders, hoping for an opportunity to get in.

Also clamoring for entry are educated and affluent people from many countries — for job opportunities, education advancement or simply to invest money.

Of course, there are many wonderful places in the world to live. Nobody would pretend that the United States is the only worthy place to call home. But is it the best? The most reliable survey of them all — where people want to be — seems to say "Yes." Surely, something truly wonderful must be going on in this country for so many people to demand, or ask for, the right to live here.

But if all you did was read the big city newspapers and watch cable news, you'd be left with the impression that immigrants to this country are somehow purposely mistreated, exploited, poisoned and starved while they struggle to make a better life for themselves and their families in our country.

If things were that bad, there'd be no controversy at the border, because nobody would cross it — legally or illegally — to subject themselves to such abuse.

By voting with their feet, immigrants to this country testify to a powerful fact that many in the news media don't seem to get. And neither do the people who did the dumb survey.

'Inaccurate proclamations' Dear Editor,

Your Aug. 30 editorial made inaccurate proclamations, i.e., Pure Water Monterey is unable to meet the need for water. The expanded plant could produce 1,500 AF extra for development, beyond the current need. You call Marina Coast Water District's director a "rep of the water activists." MCWD opposes the desal plant because it will extract their groundwater and damage the aquifer with increased seawater. The petition was tied to an earlier appeal against the Monterey County Planning Commission's approval. The fact that the pump will also serve Carmel Valley for the recycled plant is a concurrent reality.

Measure J was put on the ballot by Public Water Now; nothing to do with MCWD. Yes, we are "water activists" if that means concerned citizens who want to see local public control of our water supply like 87 percent of the rest of America.

Finally, you abandon intellectual argument when you call people dumb or crazy. The ability to take in new information and adjust analyses is a mark of intelligence. The CPUC disregarded new information regarding seawater intrusion, and the alternative project was not considered. A new review of this expensive, impacting project is prudent, not crazy.

'Short but elegant' Dear Editor,

Thank you once again for your short, but elegant, editorial on "water activists." The persistence of this bunch is simply amazing, particularly when one considers the willingness to endure years of draconian water rationing. It would be extremely difficult to find any community in the United States that could be led like a bunch of sheep into a condition where every possible use of water (including for cleanliness) is typically associated with a sense of inhibition or, worse yet, guilt!

I admire your courage in speaking out so elegantly on this issue when, I am sure, you are fully aware that your readership willingly went to the polls to demand a pie-in-the-sky solution to our horrendous water shortage problems.

Leading a humble, helpful life

LONG BEFORE Dan Baldwin had ever eaten dinner at Rancho Cielo or checked out the Ventana Wildlife Fund or any of the other nonprofits that benefit from the Community Foundation for Monterey County, where he is president and CEO — he was a freelance writer. And no, not for The Pine Cone.

Baldwin was born in Keokuk, Iowa, the state's southernmost city. The youngest of four children, he moved around some as his dad did so for work, but generally grew up in the Midwest. He got his bachelor's and master's degrees in nonfiction writing from the University of Iowa in Iowa City.

Despite not having its own major league team, Iowa's connection to baseball goes back to the 19th century, and Baldwin was a great fan of the game. A Yankee fan, to of a job with African-American histohe recalled of those days. People in South Dallas, where the majority of African-Americans lived, had had "parallel lives" to those of people in North Dallas. "They went to proms, to the movie theater. It looked like normal American life, but it wasn't," he said, because of segregation and civil rights issues.

How do I fit?

He and his 50-member board went about creating the African-American Heritage Tour in conjunction with a steering committee of people who had grown up in the city when it was strictly segregated. Later, the committee and board members took the tour together to celebrate.

While doing that job, Baldwin became curious about the private foundation that helped the park with its resources. "What is that like, to be on that side of nonprofit work?" he wondered. Then he went back to museum work.

He returned to Iowa and from 1996 to 2002 was the president and CEO of the National Czech & Slovak Museum & Library in Cedar Rapids, and then became the president/CEO of the Greater Cedar Rapids Community Foundation. In June of 2002, the city suffered massive flooding, and Baldwin said he was deeply gratified to have been part of relief efforts there.

In the meantime, his oldest child went into the military and was sent to DLI to learn Arabic. (Baldwin proudly noted that he later served two deployments in Iraq.) And, on Memorial Day weekend in 2004, Baldwin came to visit his son. "On my first be precise. He avidly followed his boyhood heroes, and chief among them was Mickey Mantle, the fair-haired athlete for whom nothing in the world of baseball seemed impossible.

That's why, after graduation, when Baldwin moved to Dallas and went to work for D magazine, a glossy chronicle of goings-on in the Texan metropolis, he was thrilled to land an interview with his boyhood idol.

Making it happen

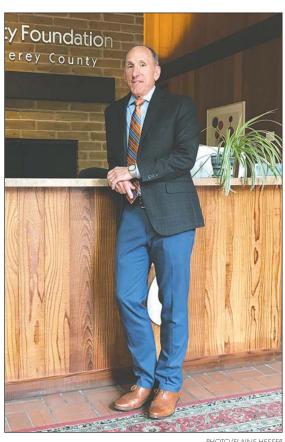

Nowadays, of course, Baldwin frequently rubs elbows with celebrities and other movers and shakers. But back then, as he pulled up to Mantle's Texas home and was ushered into the great man's den, he said, "I was awed by him." If you read the interview, you can't tell he was distracted by that, though. It's a solid profile of an American icon.

"He was far brighter, more insightful and sensitive than a lot of people know," said Baldwin. From 1984 to 1992, he did a number of sports-related profiles and interviews, including one with the man who would become the 43rd president — George W. Bush was managing partner of the Texas Rangers. He also wrangled an interview with sportscaster Bob Costas, noting that the experience would serve him well in his current job.

"I learned how to track people down. There was no internet, so I had to ask myself, 'How do I make that happen?" The Monterey resident has since learned quite a bit more about making all kinds of things happen. It started back in Texas, where he was hired to help run Dallas Heritage Village, a historical park that re-creates the city's way of life dating to the 19th century.

Cromwell was born in Maryland, grew up in Southern California, and then moved as a young adult into an apartment above Carmel's Fifth Avenue Deli (owned at the time by her mom, Deb, and her stepdad, Dan), where she worked while she attended nursing school at Monterey Peninsula College. She subsequently earned her master's degree as a clinical nurse leader at the University of San Francisco.

She spent her first year out of nursing school at Salinas Valley Oncology, then worked two years in the emergency room at Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula.

"The ER is a crazy place. One minute there's something very intense going on, and you might have a death, and then you go into the next room and deal with whatever might be waiting there," she said. "There's no reset — you just keep going, keep going. I applaud nurses who can do

Cromwell moved on to Stanford's intensive care unit, then was hired to serve on the hospital's flight team, which she calls, "my dream job — best job I ever had. You're on the helicopter. They shut down the freeway. You're always dealing with somebody who is in bad shape and needs to come to a major trauma center."

But regular night shifts proved incompatible with her lifestyle, and she found her true niche as a critical-care nurse.

'Art night'

An inherent need to manage the daily challenges of critical-care nursing is what led Cromwell to use art as an emotional release. In a pivotal moment, she was part of a team of nurses and physicians in Stanford's intensive care unit that treated a vibrant woman who died of leukemia at a young age.

"It was a hard one for all of us, because Amy was so young - it shouldn't have been happening to her," she remembered. "A lot of the nurses really got attached because ... well, how could you not? This young girl could have been any of us."

Because the patient had also been a gifted artist, Cromwell felt inspired to encourage the nursing team to participate in an "art night" to honor Amy's

"About 15 of the nurses who had taken care of Amy came out and did the art night in her honor," she said. "I took a picture and sent it to her family, and they were so happy with it. It helped them heal, and it also helped us heal."

The experience had a secondary impact on Cromwell, who discovered that night that she enjoyed making art, and

Eclectic collection of artists and thinkers finds its way to Big Sur

WHEN I first traversed the Big Sur Coast in 1985, a key landmark was Coast Gallery. I knew it had been there for some time, as I had seen it in "The Sandpiper" (1965), the beautifully filmed movie with Richard Burton and Elizabeth Taylor. I came to find out that it officially opened on Aug. 15, 1958, as the Big Sur Art Gallery. The proprietor was Mrs. LaVerne Allen, who left a job on Madison Avenue to make her home in Big Sur. She soon changed the name to Coast Gallery — Big Sur after local artist Emil White threatened to sue, as he had been using the earlier name for a dozen years.

The original structure began as a small cabin, beside Lafler Canyon, used by early homesteaders on their rugged trek down the coast. Mosaic artist Doug Madsen expanded it in the 1950s. Allen thought it could work well as a live-in gallery and bought it from Madsen. She lived at the gallery with her son, Richard, for nearly a decade, and quickly attracted nearly three dozen Big Sur artists who referred to her new gallery as "The Bank." They would deposit their art and come back later to withdraw their funds after sales

Among her stable of artists was sculptor Harry Dick Ross, who moved to Big Sur in 1937 with his wife, Lillian Laverne Allen reviews the latest art in 1960 with artist/writer Henry Miller at Coast Gallery - Big Sur.

Bos Ross, author of Big Sur novels "The Stranger" (1942) and "Blaze Allan" (1944). Another was the Ross' Partington Ridge neighbor, writer Henry Miller. It was said Miller got more pleasure from selling his art than publishing a new book. Others included David Tollerton, George Chorley and Howard Bradford, who in 1960 was awarded a Guggenheim fellowship for his creative printmaking. The growth and success of the gallery led Allen to hire Madsen to add a second story in 1960.

After creating a unique and thriving business, Allen left Big Sur for Spain in the late 1960s. Nobody seems to know why, but many suspect it was to keep her son from having to go to Vietnam. For a time after she left, the gallery was poorly run by a group that was more focused on drugs than art. It had become run down when "K the Candler" bought it for his home and workshop in 1972.

Sandcasting

"K" was the nickname of Gary Koeppel, a native of Oregon who earned his Bachelor of Arts in English literature at Portland State University in 1961 and his Master of Fine Arts degree in creative writing from the famed Iowa Writers' Workshop in 1963. He then became an English > instructor at the University of Iowa, University of Puerto Rico and Portland State

> It was the 1960s and he developed classes on "experiential writing" and produced the first college credit course called "LSD and the Psychedelic Movement." He also brought in guest lecturers, including Timothy Leary, Baba Ramdas, Ken Kesey and the Merry Pranksters, Allen Ginsberg and Alan Watts. Fritz Perls invited Koeppel to teach at Esalen in 1969. This was Koeppel's introduction to Big Sur, living on the Esalen campus for a season. From there he went to Malibu to do some commercial writing and began developing a unique method for creating artistic sandcast candles. He began selling to friends, then at art shows, and then to galleries. He had found his muse in candlemaking.

He returned to Monterey County and worked with attorney and former Carmel Mayor Eben Whittlesey to purchase Coast Gallery in 1972, as a place where he could make and sell candles. When he moved in, he found a cache of 20 or 30 Henry Miller paintings that were not part of what he bought. Miller had moved down to Pacific Palisades, so Koeppel packed up the paintings and brought them to Miller, who in amazement replied, "When a man has reached old age, nobody ever brings anything back. Don't you know?" They had a nice four-hour visit and Koeppel returned to Big Sur with the paintings and

That December, Chilton published Koeppel's, "Sculptured Sandcast Candles" — a how-to book on the process Koeppel developed. He was feeling great for a few months until torrential rains hit Big Sur in February 1973. He and a tenant with a young child got out just in time, but mudslides destroyed the building and his new Jeep.

Koeppel was out of business for a year-and-a-half, not sure what he was going to do. Then he learned about two large wooden water tanks that had been decommissioned by the City of San Leandro. They were made of heart redwood from trees, he learned, that were living at the time of Christ. After negotiating a good price, he transported the numbered pieces to the site of the former gallery and reassembled the tanks for the new Coast Gallery that opened in 1974.

Keeping a promise

Koeppel grew Coast Gallery into the largest gallery of American Craftsmen in the United States. He also became an active player in the Big Sur community, founding the Big Sur Chamber of Commerce, Volunteer Fire Brigade and the Big Sur Gazette newspaper. Koeppel owned the gallery until 2016 — some 45 years. He also expanded and over the years operated Coast Galleries in Pebble Beach, Carmel and three sites in Hawaii.

Koeppel also continued his writing, and fulfilled a promise to Harry Ross. Before he died, Ross gave Koeppel Lillian's notes for her planned third Big Sur book and asked Koeppel to write it. He not only wrote "The Road" (2012), but arranged for publishing it along with reprints of her earlier works as "The Big Sur Trilogy."

Koeppel and his wife, Emma, still make their home in the Carmel area, and Coast Gallery, under new ownership, continues as an important and recognizable part of the Big Sur landscape.

"Then I found an artist in Portland who does intuitive painting and spent five days with her," she said. "That's when I fell in love with the whole process, and it just sort of launched everything for me."

She continued to educate herself through instructional videos on YouTube and by attending local classes and Cromwell first displayed her art publicly last November at the Gilroy Center for the Arts during a fundraiser featuring small paintings, but a big confidence boost came in February, when she was invited to exhibit her work in a two-month solo show at Forage & Soul, a Carmel Valley boutique (now closed).

"I honestly didn't feel like I was ready for a solo show it committed to it anyway. They hung all of my artwork, and a lot of it sold — but, for me, making a sale is never about the money," she said. "The money is great because it allows me to invest in more supplies, but my reward is that I get to share my passion with somebody who loves what I made. That's what makes it worthwhile, and it's how I feel

Inspired by Rumi

Cromwell draws her inspiration from various sources but often conceals a meaningful quote or a poem on her canvas before applying her layers of paint. A painting entitled "When I Run" — part of an exhibit at the Monterey County Health Department (1270 Natividad Road, Salinas) — was inspired by a 13th-century poem of the same name by her favorite poet, Rumi. That verse is hidden behind the artwork, she said.

Cromwell's art will be featured in October at the Testarossa Tasting Room in Carmel Valley, in November and December at Monterey Museum of Art's miniatures exhibition, and will be available soon at Ami, a boutique on Dolores between Fifth and Sixth. day in Monterey, I thought, 'What happens in your life that you get to live and work

His path to finding out began with a search letter from the Community Foundation for Monterey County and an interview in the late 2000s. "I kept thinking, 'How would a guy from Iowa fit in here?" he recalled.

Baldwin needn't have worried. "We were so welcomed," he said. "Now we're so deeply connected to the community." He's also acutely conscious of the county's needs that visitors to the Peninsula don't always get to see.

"I started reading the Herald and Californian online before I moved here in 2009," he said. He noticed "a huge spike in homicides" in Salinas — 29 in that year (more than double that of 2007), plus 22 more in other parts of the county.

The number moved generally upward until 2015, when the city saw 40 murders. This year, Baldwin said, thanks in part to the work of the Community Foundation and others, that rate is down about 89 percent, with one homicide in the first six months of 2019.

Although tackling the problems of a county as diverse as Monterey, with its mix of tourism, government operations, farming, ranching and even petroleum production, could be daunting, Baldwin said, "I don't feel like we're tilting at windmills. What we do is not futile." Whether he's at a fundraiser in a swanky hotel or visiting the food bank in Salinas, he said he feels "privileged to have a foot in both worlds. It has to do with humility on both sides."

He went on to explain that people who give aren't always the wealthiest. "There's a misconception that a lot of those who are philanthropists are sitting in ivory towers," far from the people they're helping. To the contrary, Baldwin said, "Our donors volunteer at the food bank and drive Meals on Wheels vans. They are of all political stripes, and I have the privilege of interacting with these people who have all these perspectives.'

A dog named Buster

Baldwin has managed to stay above the red-vs.-blue fray, with both MAGA-hat wearers and people who "feel the Bern" among his many friends and colleagues in the philanthropic world. "We stay focused on shared outcomes and don't let political differences distance us from what we're mutually trying to accomplish," he said.

To maintain his positive energy, Baldwin recharges by spending time with his wife — an artist and writer — running, hiking, gardening and playing golf. He counts a 28-pound, 7-year-old fox terrier mix named Buster (from AFRP) among his buddies, too. "He's one of the happiest beings on earth," observed Baldwin.

As he moves forward with the foundation, he'd like to see its assets grow so that it's there for future generations. And, he added, "My wife and I want to be able to live here and stay part of the community. A grandkid or two would be nice, too.'

na Lyn Allen's medical benefits," Morris wrote in the complaint. "Ms. Gullo found that although Allen opted out of the medical benefits program, multiple additional computer steps had been taken to add Allen's family members to the medical benefits program."

Not her first time in court

When Gullo confronted her, Allen said she'd done it by mistake, according to Morris. Afterward, the city hired an outside auditor, and that review was completed on Dec. 31, 2017. Allen had been placed on paid leave in fall 2017 and was subsequently fired in April 2018, and Mozingo handed the results of the city's investigation over to the Monterey County District Attorney's Office two months later. At the time, he estimated Allen had allegedly stolen around

Assuming she appears in Monterey County Superior Court in Salinas for her arraignment Oct. 1, it won't be Allen's first time in a criminal courtroom. She was also convicted of food-stamp fraud in 2013 — a charge that was reduced from a felony to a misdemeanor after she repaid the stolen

In December 2017, she petitioned to have the case dismissed under a state law that allows people who were convicted of crimes and completed probation but didn't go to jail to get their cases expunged. Her petition was granted in February 2018.

According to the Aug. 28 letter Morris sent to Allen at an address on Laura Way in Paso Robles, she must go to a law enforcement office to be booked on the felony charges and then show up in court next month. If she fails to do so, a warrant will be issued for her arrest.

By land or airborne, Pirates football squad is not to be trifled with STEVENSON'S VARSITY football coach, Kyle Cassamas, would be a geyser of enthusiasm under any circumstances, but the preseason prospects of the 2019 Pirates give him legitimate reason to gush like Old Faithful as the season opener approaches.

Peninsula Sports

By DENNIS TAYLOR

For starters, 60 players are suiting up for practice this fall at the Pebble Beach school, which in some years has barely had enough healthy bodies to finish out a season. He's got experienced players at quarterback, tailback, and the receiver positions, multiple veterans on defense, and 12 linemen on his depth chart.

And since this is Cassamas' third season as head coach, all but the first-year players know the playbook, the system, the expectations, and the level of competition they can expect from the Pacific Coast Athletic League's Santa Lucia Division, where the Pirates won four of their six games in 2018 (including the season finale) after a 0-3 start.

"That was the momentum we needed," the coach said. "Year One for me at Stevenson was all about building a culture around the concept of always giving maximum effort, never wanting to quit, seeing everybody on the team as part of our family, and understanding that we're battling not just for ourselves, but anyone who has ever worn a Stevenson jersey."

Players also participated for the third consecutive year in an offseason program that didn't exist before Cassamas arrived. All are encouraged to be three-sport athletes at the school, and take part in a weight-lifting program during non-football months. Cassamas also implemented a spring football program that includes testing to provide the coaching staff with an idea of each player's strengths and needs.

"I send them off with goals to achieve during the summer, and I ask them to check in with me on a weekly basis," he said. "It's all up to them, but I give them all the tools they need, and there is accountability."

Those things would be positives under any circumstances, but Cassamas has an exciting corps of veteran players returning, which means his coaching staff can spend far less time teaching formations and plays, and more time on strategy and technique.

Case in point: Dylan Santos was asked last year to transform into a starting quarterback — a position he had never played — just two weeks before the opener due to an injury to another player. The entire season was an on-the-job education, from the ground up.

Experience matters

"This year, as a senior, he has a full year under his belt and we see that growth every day in practice," Cassamas said of Santos, who was a first-team All-Santa Lucia Division choice as a junior. "He's making the reads [of the defense] he needs to make for us to be successful. He's learned that offense is about moving the ball down the field, getting the first downs, and controlling the clock so our defense stays fresh, as opposed to taking everything on his own shoulders and trying to make the big-time throw."

Santos also will have skilled receivers this season in Evan Johnson (son of former NFL player Ron Johnson)

Senior Dylan Santos (left), an All-Santa Lucia Division choice in 2018, returns as Stevenson's quarterback. (Right) Evan Johnson (No. 3) and Connor Cosand (10) are returning starters on both offense and defense. Coach Kyle Cassamas expects a solid season, with numerous returning offensive and defensive players.

TRUST

"We hope to make a difference - to leave things a little better than when we came. We trust the Community Foundation to carry out our wishes. Our giving has evolved to include our family; that's icing on the cake."

and Connor Cosand (who combined for 38 receptions and 530 yards), plus the athletic Tyler Garrett (shortstop on the baseball team), who was a defensive starter and reserve receiver on last year's squad.

Tyler Olson, who gained 223 yards on 52 carries as a sophomore, is expected to step into the spotlight this season as Stevenson's starting tailback after an offseason in which he participated in college camps and worked with former NFL and Canadian Football League receiver Maurice Mann (a Monterey High alum), now a personal coach.

"Tyler is an excellent athlete — a special talent — and the work he did during the offseason has built tons of confidence in his mind," Cassamas said. "He's a kid who can run between the tackles, with good speed, and he also can catch the ball out of the backfield, which makes him a three-down player. We'll try to get the ball in his hands as often as we can.'

A strong offensive line has decent size in Kevin Zou (6-2, 245), Sherif Elsakkar (6-1, 210), and returning starter Ethan White (6-1, 205), among others.

Cosand, Olson, and White are returning starters on defense, among eight players who will play on both offense and defense. Gunter McCormick and Henrique D'Augostino wil be on the defense line, and Ian Murdock and James Nielsen are linebackers who are strong on pass coverage and also can fill the holes as tacklers.

Garrett and Guido Davi will be in the defensive backfield with Darnell Adler (nephew of a former NFL player). Seven players are competing for the Pirates' weakside cornerback position — otherwise, the starting lineup on defense is essentially set.

Pieces in place

Pacific Grove, with 24 returning seniors, is expected to be formidable (particularly in light of a 24-0 non-league conquest of Stevenson last year), and Marina, Harbor and Greenfield could be much improved. But Cassamas enters the trophy dash with a positive feeling.

"I think we're going to have a really successful season — all the pieces are in place," he said. "I believe our guys are all on the same page, and they're determined to turn the football program around."

Two other reasons for excitement: The Pirates will fly — not bus — to Saturday's 1 p.m. season opener against Webb School in Claremont (30 miles east of Los Angeles). And they'll play their home opener

Tyler Olson, a junior (in the dark green uniform), will start at tailback for the Pirates this season as they look forward to taking on Webb School in Claremont and San Jose Lynbrook in their road and home openers.

Monterey landmark to be site of new festival

BEST KNOWN as one of downtown Monterey's most important historical locations, the Cooper-Molera Adobe is looking for plein air painters who want to participate in the first Painting from Porches art festival, which is set for Saturday and Sunday, Sept. 21-22.

Art Roundup

By CHRIS COUNTS

"We are hoping for a good turnout of local and distant painters," the co-director of the adobe, Susan Klusmire, told The Pine Cone.

The festival starts off with a plein air contest Saturday.

Painter Maia Negre is one of many artists showcased at Artisana Gallery, which will stay open late this week for Pacific Grove's First Fridays celebration.

Contestants can choose their subjects from a list that includes a variety of nearby sites.

On Sunday from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m., participants will have an opportunity to sell their paintings at the Cooper-Molera Adobe. Artists will keep 75 percent of the sale price, with the rest going to the nonprofit National Trust for Historical Preservation, which will spend the money locally. Awards and prizes will also be announced.

Klusmire came up with the idea for the art fundraiser, which comes as no surprise since she was once the executive director of the Carmel Art Association. "I got the idea a few years ago when we had an office at the old maritime museum, and I was on balcony checking out all the amazing views looking over the wharf, the marina area and Custom House Plaza," she added.

The deadline for entering the festival is Thursday, Sept. 12. For more details, call (831) 223-0172, ext. 7776.

Fuga's 2007 debut album, "Lilikoi," earned her a Na Hoku Hanohano Award — Hawaii's equivalent of a Grammy — for Most Promising Artist. Her 2010 album, "Misery's End," included cameos by Jack Johnson and Ziggy Marley. In 2013, she played before another native of Hawaii, President Barack Obama, at the White House.

Proceeds will help pay for Sunset Center's concerts and programs, particularly those which benefit local students.

This year's aloha-themed fundraiser will be more casual than its predecessors. Changes included eliminating the event's live auction.

WHEN STACI Giovino moved to the Monterey Peninsula years ago, she didn't find much work in her career field - interior decorating for funeral homes and dentists' offices — so she went to work in a furniture store, figuring it came close. She wasn't happy there, though, and a friend who knew it rang her up one day to tell her about a couple who had gone on a food tour while traveling and couldn't stop talking about it. It sounded like something

Giovino might be interested in, her friend culinary stops, sharing stories about Carmel's quirks, history and culture along the way, in February 2012. Today, she and a half-dozen other women lead tours, sometimes more than once a day, stopping at six or seven local spots selected from an ever-growing list that now includes 17 participating businesses.

Choice of tours

The company offers a three-hour Classic Food Tour starting at 11 a.m. on select days, as well as a two-hour Happy Hour Tour later in the afternoon that makes three or four stops.

Efficiently led and on foot, the tours are ideal for visitors and newcomers looking to get a feel for their surroundings, learn about this unique town, and get a few good ideas of where to eat and drink, but they're also fun for locals playing tourist for the day — and might even get them out of their personal ruts when it comes to restaurant

Midday on Labor Day, eight people strolled through downtown, starting at Sunset Center, where the guide, Bonnie, shared a bit of local history about the theater, which was the city's first school, and then led the group to Grasing's for tastes of chef/owner Kurt Grasing's famous four-onion tart, fried calamari (some of the best around) and tomato-basil soup, along with a taste of chardonnay.

Other stops, reached via some of Carmel's beautiful but little-known interblock walkways, parks and key historical sites, included honey tasting with Jake Reisdorf in Carmel Plaza, an all-beef hot dog with all the trimmings at Nielsen Bros. Market, and an olive oil and vinegar tasting at Trio on Dolores. Affina provided house-made crispy rolls with beef on salad greens and a taste of dry rosé made from tempranillo grapes, and Café Carmel — known for its decadent house-made desserts and incredible window displays — served chocolate cheesecake and invited guests into the kitchen. The tour wrapped up just shy of the three-hour mark with sea salt caramels and truffles at Lula's Chocolates on Mis-

'We work hard to keep thing running on time," Giovino said, though she admitted circumstances sometimes interfere with that. "The intention is to let everyone enjoy without feeling rushed, but to experience as much as possible."

Changing lineups

Additional businesses that partner with Carmel Food Tours include Anton & Michel, Cultura, Brophy's Tavern, Cantinetta Luca, Caraccioli Cellars, Il Grillo, La Balena, Carmel Belle, Villa Sombreros and Vesuvio.

> When it comes to planning the route for any given day, Giovino said, "Basically, we create the itinerary based on the availability of our partners." Some restaurants are only open for lunch on weekends or are closed on one of the tour days, for instance. "Other partners, like the specialty shops, Cafe Carmel and Grasing's, have been very gracious with their availabil-

> The Happy Hour Tour includes Luca, which serves a flaming Zombie cocktail or wine with a snack, Grasing's for a cocktail or wine and a trio of savory treats, La Balena — where guests make their own spritzers and nibble charcuterie - and Vesuvio, where the group gets a table on the rooftop deck and enjoys Negronis or wine and artichoke

> "We have other partners available once we start gaining traction for other days, and love going to Terry's Lounge, Vino Napoli and even La Playa Hotel," Giovino said.

The fall months are Carmel Food Tours' busiest, according to Giovino. "There are often two tours a day, and trying to make sure guests are served, vendors aren't overstressed, and we're not missing out on a ton of business make for some sleep-challenged nights," she said.

For more information and to book a tour, which costs $94 per person for the classic (limited to 16 people) and $69 for Happy Hour (limited to 12), visit www.carmelfoodtour.com or call (831) 256-3007.

Giovino said Carmel Food Tours also started offering a corporate retreat package for up to 35 guests with a luxury shuttle with pastries and coffee, a certified coach for team development, a food tour for lunch, a post-tour development wrap-up, and wine and chocolate for the ride home.

■ New lunch options at 7D

Seeking to offer some less expensive options that are still beautiful and satisfying but can be enjoyed during a workday lunch hour, Seventh & Dolores Steakhouse introduced more than a half-dozen new dishes capitalizing on executive chef Tom Snyder's penchant for creative combinations of flavors and textures. All of the new dishes cost less than $20.

On a menu that's now driven more by seasonality, one highlight is a starter of grilled peach and avocado with green onion and lime vinaigrette garnished with a small pile of arugula and crumbled queso fresco. In the attractive crab and melon salad, thinly sliced melon is garnished with even more thinly sliced watermelon radishes and celery, while Dungeness crab is piled in the center, dressed in lemon agave

vinaigrette and topped with smoked trout

Snyder's take on a BLT Salad calls for roasted prosciutto-wrapped hearts of baby romaine atop his house-made green goddess dressing, accompanied by a sour-dough crisp and chunks of cucumber, heirloom tomatoes and avocado. Other new additions include scallop crudo with watermelon gazpacho, tuna tartine (tuna prepared two ways — seared and pulled — with haricots verts, fennel and celery on top of sourdough toast), chicken tinga, and the surprisingly satisfying freekeh and hummus bowl, a vegan dish with hummus, ancient grains, roasted squash and eggplant, and harissa.

Snyder also added a few veggie sides to the lunch menu — delicious curried cauliflower, broccolini with almond romesco sauce, and Belgian-style fries with truffle

Seventh & Dolores Steakhouse is open daily for lunch, social hour and dinner. For more information, visit www.7dsteakhouse.com

■ Chamber recruiting restaurants for Taste

The Carmel Chamber of Commerce is seeking restaurants and food purveyors to participate in its largest fundraiser of the year, the Oct. 3 Taste of Carmel, which takes place from 5 to 9 p.m. at the Carmel Mission. The event features dozens of restaurants and wineries providing small bites and tastes to more than 800 guests.

Restaurants are expected to provide 650 pieces of food apiece and will be offered publicity in return, as well as admission for three people and discounted tickets for additional guests. They'll get an 8-foot table and will not have to bring their own plates and flatware. There are no available power sources, though, so heat has to be self-contained.

Anyone interested in taking part should call Erin Averill at (831) 624-3877 ext. 205.

■ Twisted Roots brut rosé

Twisted Roots recently released a new wine — brut rosé — and for those who like their pink bubbly on the fruitier side, it's sure to be a hit. Made from pinot noir grapes, the wine is aromatic with strawberries and raspberries, and has notes of tart cherry and cranberry on the palate.

The winery, which has a tasting room in Carmel Valley Village at 12 Del Fino Place, produced just 100 cases of the new sparkler, which sells Founded by Don and Rosemary Talley in 1986, when they produced 450 cases, Talley has grown over the years, with a state-of-the-art winery built in fall 1991 and a new tasting room constructed in 2002, to a production of 36,000 cases. It's still family run, and with the area's cool climate, Talley specializes in pinot noir and chardonnay.

In solo shows opening Saturday at the Carmel Art Association, painters Jan Wagstaff and Howard Perkins find beauty where land meets water.

PATRICIA QUALLS - CONTEMPORARY ART California,

Mission, 3rd SW of Ocean, Carmel and 15 W Carmel Valley Rd, Carmel Valley www.patriciaqualls.com

In "Water's Edge," Wagstaff takes a close look at the surfaces, textures and reflections she finds on large bodies of water. And in "Our Splendid Coastline," Perkins explores how the weather constantly changes the appearance of "the western edge of Monterey County."

Also new at the downtown gallery are shows by painter Jennifer Anderson and printmaker Pamela Takigawa. The former uses watercolors and gouache to capture wildlife, while the latter uses watercolors to enhance monotype prints of birds and flowers.

The gallery, which hosts an artists' reception Saturday from 5 to 7 p.m., is located on Dolores between Fifth and Sixth. Call (831) 624-6176.

■ 'Pastures of Heaven'

Showcasing more than 40 local artists, the 12th annual Art in the Pastures of Heaven exhibit returns Friday, from 6 to 9 p.m., to the Church of the Good Shepherd in Corral De Tierra.

Participants include painters Alicia Meheen, Emily Hull-Parsons and Gerard Martin, glass artist Nick Leonoff, and many others. The show also includes photography, textile art and jewelry. The art will be sold through a silent auction, and a raffle will offer an assortment of

Tickets are $45. Proceeds benefit Good Shepherd's mission and outreach programs. The church is located at 301 Corral De Tierra Road. For more details, call (831)

■ Wine and art meet again

In a show that's been on display at Testarossa Winery in Carmel Valley since early August, painter Rolf Lygren uses oils and watercolors to explore some of his favorite local places. "Rolf is a popular local artist and we are very pleased to host his work," tasting room manager Biz Eichen said.

Titled "Wind & Water / Mountains and Meadows," the show continues through Sept. 15. Located at 15 W. Carmel Valley Road, the wine tasting room will be the site of a reception for Lygren Saturday from noon to 2 p.m. Call (831) 298-7726.

■ 'Shining a light' on painter

Formerly known as Coast Gallery, Coast Big Sur welcomes a display of abstract paintings by Rebecca Koury.

"We're proud to exhibit these works," said Peter Mullin, who bought the gallery three years ago from longtime owner Gary Koeppel. "One of the primary missions of Coast Big Sur has always been to shine a light on Central California art and artists, and Rebecca is one of the finest artists currently working in our region."

The gallery is located three miles south of Nepenthe restaurant. Call (831) 667-2301.

■ 'Each photo leads to the next'

Two exhibits go on display Friday at the Monterey Museum of Art, including one by photographer Victor Landweber which seeks to illustrate the impact artists and their artwork — have on one another.

In the show, Landweber displays 38 different photos he took of other artists' work and displays them in a sequence which shows the links between each.

"It's about connections and relations," the museum's Allison Hitte said. "Each photograph leads to the next one it's kind of a chain reaction."

The show continues through Dec. 31. The museum is located at 559 Pacific St.

Also new at the museum is a show by painter Penelope Gottlieb, who reimagines classic Audubon bird illustrations. Titled "Invasive Plant," the series "seeks to draw attention to the growing environmental crisis and the fragility of our natural surroundings.'

To call attention to the impact of invasive plants, painter Peggy Gottlieb "reimagines" Audubon bird illustrations.

Open Saturday 1-3 p.m. 5th Avenue 1NW Lincoln 3 Bed, 2 Bath | CharmingByTheSea.com

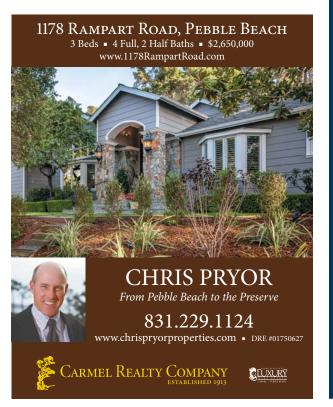

In the very heart of Carmel-by-the-Sea, this charming cottage combines a refined coastal comfort with luxurious finishes and details. The main living and two guest bedrooms are downstairs while the master enjoys privacy and peeks of the ocean upstairs. This ideal pied-à-terre takes full advantage of its 1,600 sf with a separate dining area off the entry way, a gourmet kitchen with a breakfast bar and a living room that opens up to a gorgeous deck. The master suite is an oasis all to itself with French doors that open to a small deck and the master bathroom has a beautiful soaking tub and walk-in closet. A smart home built by Chris Tescher in 2014, this property features Nest thermostats, Sonos surround sound and 3 Ecosmart fireplaces. Simply speaking, it just doesn't get better than Charming-by-the-Sea! $2,450,000

Baseball, a wedding — and one of the greatest catches of all time

WHEN PEOPLE ask me where my column ideas come from, I tell them I don't know and hope to never know — but I always hope to recognize the ideas when they come to me. Two seemingly unrelated events recently illustrated my point.

The first was when a charming lady, whom I didn't know, approached me while I was sitting outside of Starbucks. "How did the wedding go?" she asked. Of course she was referring to my son's wedding, which I wrote about a few weeks ago.

The second event happened while I was watching the San Francisco Giants play the Washington Nationals on television. A Nationals player smashed a pitch into the gap in left-center field. Kevin Pillar, the Giants center fielder, raced to his right and while diving with his body fully stretched out made an amazing catch, robbing the batter of an extra base hit.

"How was the wedding?" and "an amazing catch." There should be no connection between the two. My brain made a connection. There are two famous catches that I replay in the locker room of my memory. One is Willie Mays, streaking into the bowels of the Polo Grounds to run down the towering drive hit by Vic Wertz in the 1954 World Series. Dwight Clark made the second when he leapt in the back of the end zone to snag an arching football that a backpedaling Joe Montana lofted over more than 700 pounds of fiercely clawing Dallas linemen to win the NFC Championship in 1980. Pillar's catch certainly approached those two in sheer athleticism and determination.

There is another great catch that no one knows about because it didn't happen in a stadium with thousands of fans in attendance and millions more watching on television. Nevertheless, it's a catch that's in my personal hall of fame, made by someone whose athletic prowess resembled Mays, Clark and Pillar in the same way that a pup tent resembles the Taj Mahal.

The catch took place in the shadow of St. Louis' famous Gateway Arch, but it wasn't in Busch Stadium, the home of the St. Louis Cardinals. Let me set the stage.

In 2009 I flew to St. Louis to attend my niece's wedding, an event that seemed to run into more snags than a pair of nylons in a briar patch. Less than a month before the wedding date, the original venue for the reception went bankrupt and closed down without any chance for the bridal couple to recoup their deposit. Then their intended honeymoon in Mexico was canceled because of a swine flu threat.

The bankruptcy was a big story in St. Louis, and my

The bride was beautiful, the groom handsome, and the wedding ceremony fraught with meaning, including the exchange of vows between the bride and the groom's two young children from a previous marriage, where the children accepted my niece as their "bonus mother." It was a quadruple-Kleenex moment.

Among the significant events at wedding receptions are those hopeful moments when the bride tosses her bouquet to the unmarried women and the groom flings his bride's garter to the unmarried men. Wedding lore states that the two persons catching the bouquet and garter will be the next to be married (though not necessarily to each other).

Competing with firefighters

As a widower, it had been more than 50 years since I attended a wedding as a single man. Still, my nieces and nephews pushed me onto the dance floor, insisting that I qualified as an eligible bachelor. You can imagine how out of place I looked and felt on a stage dominated by much younger men, many of them firefighters, as was the groom.

Then a drum roll, crashing cymbals — the groom's arm started its backward arc, and suddenly a long-dormant competitive streak deep within me slashed its way to the surface. I became Christian Darling in Irwin Shaw's short story, "The Eighty-Yard Run." I was a dinosaur whose youth came flooding back as I dashed across the floor faster than Mays, a blur in a blue blazer leaping higher than Clark and stretching out almost as much as Pillar. I was Nureyev, Nijinsky, Magic and Michael as I plucked the flower-bedecked diaphanous piece of thigh candy from the outstretched fingers of one of the groomsmen. I ran the length of the hall waving my trophy aloft.

And the crowd went wild!
