Do Something! Get Busy!

Tell the World About Carmel

In Carmel, year in and year out, the business people and property-owners, those who have houses for rent, have gone along in the summer fairly well satisfied with the business they have done and the length of time their houses have been rented.

But about September first, when the sojourners become fewer and receipts begin to fall off we hear that business is "dull," and we receive letters asking "Why is my house vacant?"

The fault is right here. Very little attempt is made to inform the outside public and tourists that Carmel has the finest fall, winter and spring climate in the world.

There should be as many people here the year through as there are in June, July and August.

Hotel owners, real estate, owners of improved property and merchants should cooperate in a plan to spread broadcast the advantages of Carmel as a year-around resort.

If we sit back and wait for people and business to come, it never will come. If you want your cottage rented, your store busy, your hotel full, publicity is the thing to do it.

In advertising, work one city at a time, one or two each month. Suppose, for instance, five thousand attractive pamphlets were mailed to Pasadena, and as a result a hundred persons were induced to come here sooner or later. Suppose we worked ten cities. Well, we might not get a thousand persons here, but we would get a large number.

Europeanizing American War Songs is Quite the Vogue

Catherine Van Dyke in Harper's Weekly: War music is not the same now as in the old days of glorified onslaught where the call of the bugle and the beat of the drum gave a quick thrill to the dash of battle. Today music is used medicinally—a sedative to ease the tenseness of trench life; a bromide in the hospitals where "Sister Suzzie's singing songs to soldiers;" a diversion in the internment camps where the boys write home for something to sing or play on "because music keeps us from getting blue."

You hear music everywhere in the countries at war. The boys dance their farewell at home to it, march out, fight, die or convalesce to music. When they cannot speak clearly under the emotion of defeat or victory, they burst out singing. Music is the slang of war.

A good war song needs an irresistible swing and a strong emotional appeal. It must make light of the long march and be rich in the "sweetest girl I know" sentiment. Perhaps it is because our American songs furnish the most spontaneous ragtime cheer and have a good beat as well, they are so surprisingly popular.

One expects the Canadians to sing them, but when the British volunteers tramp, along to "Oh, You Beautiful Doll," you prick up your ears and your foot goes tip-pety-tap—

Oh, you beautiful doll, you great big beautiful doll,
Let me put my arms around you:
Gee, but I'm glad I found you . . .

So the song goes slipping from one back home favorite to another. "Marching Through Georgia," "John Brown's Body" and "Dixie" are listed with the printed band music for English regiments, though the words are changed. Here is the version of "Marching Through Georgia:"

We've had enough of trenches and of shifting to and fro
And of waiting weeks together for the enemy to go,

But now he's on the move at last
and now for heel and toe,
While we go marching through Germany.

The navy chanties smack even more of American tunes. This is their "Dixie:"

In Dixie land I had a gal,
Way down in Dixie;
Her name it was Jemima Joe,
De finest gal as you all must know—
Sing, a song, blow along.

In the French trenches there is continuous music. Marie, Fifi, Nanon, are strangely serenaded by Jacques who, when he isn't sighing to catch a German is sighing for "Un Peu D'amour." Sometimes out of an exalted politeness he tries to sing English words to English songs, but it is as hard a task as when the French tried to translate the English rally. "Are we downhearted? No," by "Est-ce que nous avons le coeur brise? Mais non."

Few songs of any country celebrate the deeds of present heroes. Ireland alone twangs its harp to chants about its son Michael O'Leary, who won the first V. C. of the war. But these chants are not sung by soldiers, but by Irish girls with shawls about their very serious faces, which never change expression through the long verses beginning:

Arrah, glory Mike O'Leary, you're the grandest boy of all,
Sure, there's not a soul in Ireland from Macroon to Donegal,
But is proud of you, and prouder
than a peacock of his tail,
Arrah, bravo, Mike O'Leary,
you're the pride of Innis-fail.

At Potsdam I saw a regiment march out to a song that sounded gentle enough for a lullaby. The soft, rolling melody was Schumann's and the words were as a valentine greeting. There is no ragtime sung in German. The simplest songs have good settings and the melancholy of the new refrains haunts one with such tender sentiments as "I have lost a comrade."

If you read it in the Pine Cone,
you may safely repeat it.

INLAND

By Mabel Rice Bigler

In breathless heat of mid-day
The wide bare fields lie dead;
There's no green in the stubble,
There's no shade for my head;
But I can sense the forest-dark,
And the wild cry of the sea,
Because the pines of Carmel
Once sang their song to me.

Along the dusty high-road
No spring to meet my need,
Even the lizard shelters
Beneath a sun-dried weed;
But I can feel a cool wind,
And damp mists, salt and sweet,
For once the waves of Carmel
Broke foaming at my feet.

South Does Not Forget Its Distinguished Citizens

A monument to John Tyler eminent Virginia statesman and tenth president of the United States, was added recently to the list of imposing memorials erected in Richmond, Va., to the memory of the famous southerners buried there. The monument, which is the first public memorial erected to President Tyler, was made possible by a congressional appropriation.

John Tyler, to whose memory the public has been rather tardy in paying honor, was one of the American statesmanship. He was born in 1790 in Charles City county, Virginia, the son of Judge John Tyler, a soldier of the revolution and afterward a prominent jurist. The son began his public career at the age of 21 as a member of the Virginia house of delegates. Before his fortieth year he had served several terms in congress, two terms as governor of Virginia and a term in the United States senate.

Then came the presidential campaign of 1840, the most extraordinary of political campaigns that the country had experienced up to that time. President Van Buren was renominated by the democrats, and William Henry Harrison, who had been defeated four years before, by the whigs.

In the whig convention no platform or declaration of principles was adopted. John Tyler, who had been a member of President Jackson's party, was nominated to catch Democratic votes. It was perfectly well known that he was opposed to the whole whig theory of government, but it was never supposed by those who voted for him that he would become president, as he did through the death of General Harrison one month after inauguration.

The situation that developed with Tyler's accession to the presidency was not long in producing startling results. Though no platform had been adopted in the whig nominating convention, it was well understood that the doctrines of Henry Clay involving the policy of a national bank, a high tariff, and internal improvements held the whig party together, and it was supposed that most people who voted for Harrison did so in the belief that his election meant the victory of Clay's doctrines and the re-establishment of the United States bank which President Jackson had put out of existence.

Tyler did not share these views, but regarded the whig triumph as a victory over a corrupt and tyrannical faction which he believed to be led by Jackson and Van Buren and their friends. Henry Clay was convinced that he could control Tyler, but he and all the whigs soon discovered their mistake.

Tyler owed his place to the whig party, but he had not changed his politics, and he remained what he had always been, a Democrat. The whigs began immediately the work of undoing the financial legislation that Jackson and Van Buren had put through. The sub-treasury of the previous administration was abolished by a bill which they declared that "all political connection between them and John Tyler was at an end from that day forth."

Only a handful of whig congressmen thereafter supported the president, but as time wore on the administration was successful against its whig opponents, who were compelled to surrender or who went down in opposition.

Perhaps the most important acts of Tyler's administration were the annexation of Texas and the treaties with England and China. At the end of his term he was nominated again for the presidency, but withdrew from the contest when it was seen that his election was improbable. After leaving the White House he withdrew to private life and did not emerge from his retirement until the civil war period, when he was elected to the confederate congress.

Many Carmelites Will Be There

Thanksgiving day is drawing upon us again, and as it behooves us to celebrate somehow, so far as lies in our power, Pine Inn has been requested to give a little Turkey Dinner, with the necessary accessories, on the 25th of this month, at 6:30 o'clock. Arrangements are being made with Mr. Perry Newberry, the well-known dramatist, for entertaining the guests during the evening, at which music, dancing and social games will take place. The price of the dinner has been fixed at 75 cents, and all are welcome. adv

A Measure of Preparedness

In the event of war the government of the United States would be obliged to depend on private individuals and firms to furnish automobiles for the transportation of troops and supplies. Therefore the War Department is in touch with the sources and has on file orders of cars to be so used.

A man writing from Chicago tenders 1000 cars; a Detroit club informs the department that 5000 cars can be obtained there.

Aviators have written tendering their machines and services.

At the Surgeon-General's office there is a record of 558 physicians who have never been in the military service, who have volunteered.

It's All in the Start

"It would be a modest and moderate claim," says Doctor Woods Hutchinson, "that the health and efficiency of our school children and their vigor and usefulness in future life could be increased at least twenty-five, if not thirty-five, per cent by prompt and intelligent attention to curable defects.

"Cleaning, straightening and filling teeth, removing adenoids and relief of catarrh, with consequent cure of deafness, fitting the peering and dazzled eyes of the shortsighted and the astigmatic with proper glasses which really let them see the sun and the stars and look the world squarely in the face, filling the aching voids in empty stomachs with warm lunches."

After ten months of obscurity, "Shop Early" and "Shop at Home" are again in the limelight. But the advice is good.

A Worthy Object

The conductor of the Zoological Park in New York is devoting much time to the establishment of a permanent wild-life protection fund to create sanctuaries for wild animals so their breed may be perpetuated. He points out that if something of the kind is not done there will be no hunting twenty years from now, and wild game will be practically extinct.

Millions and millions of acres of our national forests are now utterly destitute of game worth the mention, and over thousands of square miles in the East and West one can hunt until doomsday without finding a four-footed animal worth shooting as food.

The proposed plan is to help create an enormous increase in game that may legitimately be killed for food purposes.

Details of the scheme may be obtained by addressing Dr. W. T. Hornaday, Zoological Park, New York.

Lest We Forget

Now is the season of thanksgiving and praise. Every one of us has had or has something for which to be grateful. Not the least of these is the possession of loved ones and those whom we can call friends. These should be remembered. If you haven't the time for a letter, send a postcard. Let them know that you appreciate them.

Your Paper

Any newspaper contains matter of value to all, but the local paper is identified particularly with the interests and activities of the home. It is conducted by one whom you know and who knows you. Its few columns carry what is of especial interest to you. You have a very vital concern in its prosperity, and you can best contribute to its continuation and success by subscribing for it and advertising in it. It is your paper.

If Carmel has any civic pride, a substantial evinence thereof is sadly lacking. Last week's appeal for funds to purchase a decent fire alarm has met with no response.

Indifference and shame are closely related.

A Genuine Surprise

Seldom has a social affair been so successfully carried out as was the Waterbury party on Monday evening.

About eight o'clock, from various directions there began to gather at Twelfth avenue and Lincoln street a well-provisioned, but very quiet group of merry-makers.

At 8:15 all those who had been bid to take part were on hand, and then began the stealthy one-block procession to the House of Waterbury. Having got inside the fence that surrounded the residence, the party sought a lighted window, and at a signal burst into a rollicking song. What followed may be better imagined than described. It was a genuine surprise, and no mistake.

Those invited:

Mrs. Charles Clark, Mrs. Harry Aucourt, Miss E. McLean, Mrs. J. L. Williams, Miss Margaret Clark, B. W. Adams, Mr. and Mrs. L. S. Slevin, Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Overstreet, Mrs. R. Ohm, Mrs. F. S. Pudan.
