CHAPTER XIII.

A Game of Dice.

"Now, Senor Torre, you shall have a gambler's choice!"

The tall candles burned steadily in the massive candlesticks, the little yellow plumes shining reflected in the polished woodwork of the walls. Senor de la Guerra sat in his favorite armchair at the great mahogany table, his white, aristocratic hand tapping idly upon its glistening top. Stanway, standing at his side, watched curiously both De la Guerra and the smiling Torre.

"I am waiting, senor," returned Torre gravely.

"I have assured myself," went on De la Guerra in the same even tone, "that Pedro and Celestino and the vaquero who was shot here in this room will live. I have let all of your men go, excepting Captain Juarez. Senor Stanway," turning a little in his chair, "will you be so kind as to tell the captain that I should be pleased to see him?"

Stanway left the room promptly, returning almost immediately with the rebel captain at his heels. De la Guerra rose, bowed courteously.

"Senor capitan," he said, "I am going to wish you a pleasant ride across the border."

He snapped open a drawer of the table, drew out a packet and tossed it upon the table top.

"Will you examine it, senor?"

Juarez, frowning, a little suspicious, held back for a moment. Then under the amused eyes of Torre he stepped forward, took up the packet, opened it, stared incredulously, and fell back with a little gasp.

De la Guerra smiled.

"American banknotes," he said easily. "You will find that they amount to five thousand dollars. For your needy countrymen, senor. You see, I have never yet refused—pardon me, senor—alms to a beggar! Senor Stanway, will you be kind enough to show the captain to the door?"

"Now, Senor Torre," resumed the old man when Stanway had returned, "I am to give you your gambler's chance. I have learned that a month ago you killed a man in San Antonio. Now," leaning forward a little, "are they looking for you along the border? Have you a good chance of getting across without being shot?"

Torre's cheeks grew a little pale. He returned De la Guerra's gaze, however, and answered steadily:

"I should have, perhaps, one chance in ten thousand!"

"Good! I thought so!"

The old Spaniard slipped his hand again into the table drawer and the thing he brought out this time he handed to Torre.

"Here is your chance, senor," he said sternly.

It was a dicebox!

"What do you mean?" snapped Torre.

"I mean this: You shall shake the dice you love so well, and the stake high enough to satisfy even you! If you win, there is another packet of banknotes ready for you, and a horse to carry you as far and as fast as you can wish to go. If you lose—there is in the stable a lame horse which you are to ride across the border!"

"One Throw," He Whispered.

The dusky red ran back into Torre's cheeks.

"With whom do I shake?" he asked, a little hoarsely, his fingers growing white about the box.

"With the bitterest enemy you have," retorted the old man with dignity. "Do you know who it is?"

"You?" queried Torre, with snarling emphasis.

"Yourself! You shall cast twice, with a single die. The ace is high in this game, senor. If your first throw is higher than your second, then you go free. Will you throw now? I shall be glad when you are gone."

Torre rose swiftly to his feet, drawing near the table, his eyes burning like flames, his cheeks flushed. For a moment he stood with the die rattling in the box, which he shook slowly back and forth.

"One throw," he whispered. "One good throw, and I drink many another good bottle of red wine, I kiss many another pair of red lips, I live on in my gay little existence. One good throw. Ah!"

He had thrown.

"It is the ace!" cried Torre with suddenly up-flung head. "My lady of chance is kind to me, senor!"

"You have another throw," De la Guerra reminded him. "The ace cannot be beaten, but it may be tied!"

Now Torre scooped the die up in his box and with no moment of hesitation turned it out upon the table. Again Torre had thrown an ace!

"Try again," said De la Guerra crisply. "It is growing late."

With a curse Torre again caught up the die, again it rattled in the box, again it rolled half across the table.

"A four!" he gasped.

"A four is not bad," De la Guerra reminded him. "It may win. Again, senor."

A four! If he turned a three next time, or a deuce, he was saved. If the die showed an ace again, a six or a five, he was lost!

Again he took up the die, again cast. This time his hand, holding the dice-box, followed close to the rolling cube.

"It is the six," said De la Guerra sternly. "You were about to touch it, senor!"

Torre threw down the box. He had lost—against himself! But his head flung proudly up. "And now," he cried, "where is my lame horse? It is late, as you say."

He bowed and went out into the patio, where Gaucho and a half dozen of the cowboys were waiting. De la Guerra sighed.

"He is a brave man," he said gently. "Ah, well, he has one chance in ten thousand. Well, for a brave man—"

Then they heard the galloping of several horses headed toward the border.

CHAPTER XIV.

Conclusion.

"Teresa!" called Stanway, "Teresa!"

It was night; there was a moon, and between it and the stars was the balcony.

"Senor Billy!"

The voice floated down to him softly, and between the parted vines a very bright face looked down upon him.

"Your papa grande is in the drawing-room, Teresa," he said swiftly. "I am going back in there—to tell him something. May I, Teresita?"

"What?" she whispered. "What are you going to tell him, Senor Billy?"

"Can't you guess?" he laughed up at her.

She shook her head. But her soft eyes grew softer, her cheeks rosier, and her white hands intertwined and trembled a little.

"Will you go with me, Teresa?" he asked bluntly, after the way of Billy Stanway. "I think that I am rather afraid to go all alone. He will be inclined to be very terrible, won't he?"

Teresa laughed, said "Coward!" very prettily, and disappeared from the balcony. He met her, approximately, half a minute later in the patio.

"Teresa!" he cried, his voice shaking as he could not keep his hands from shaking.

"Don't!" she whispered, slipping away from him. "Papa grande does not like me to come to him with—my hair mussed, Senor Billy."

They came into the drawing-room together, two very young, handsome, happy, eager people. De la Guerra, his head drooping a little as though he were tired, looked up at them.

"Teresa!" he said, rising quickly. "Senor Stanway!"

"You can guess it, can't you?" Stanway blurted out. "We have a notion to send to La Panza for Father Ignacio. Is there some priest you'd prefer, senor?"

"O-oh!" gasped Teresa.

De la Guerra bowed gravely.

"Senor Stanway," he said, speaking slowly, his eyes thoughtful. "Teresa has told me how much you have done for us. There was something which she did not tell me which I guessed. I owe you—very much. I owe you everything, senor! And," with a quick, strangely sweet smile, "I am a man who pays his debts in full."

He bowed, suddenly caught up Stanway's hand, and placed it upon the girl's.

"I owe you everything. And," with a courtly bow to his granddaughter, "I give you everything!"

"Papa grande!" cried Teresa. "Papa grande!"

"The only thing," smiled the old man, "is—he is an Americano! Well, since one cannot change the Americanos—You will come to me, my children, in the library."

He walked to the door, paused, turned his smiling face upon them, and added:

"I shall not expect you immediately. Teresa, can you entertain the senor for, let us say, an hour? You will pardon me for that long, senor? I shall be very busy amending certain remarks in my memoirs," he laughed softly. "Concerning the Americanos, senor!"

Street Work Begins

Except for the highway on San Carlos Avenue, the first real street work to be done in Carmel since Lincoln street was improved many years ago, has been started.

With plows, scrapers and other machinery necessary for the work Contractor Ruthven and his men are working on Eighth Avenue.

The Gould stable will be the resting and feeding place for the horses on the job for the next ninety days or longer.

From San Carlos Avenue to the ocean Eighth Avenue will have an 18 foot roadway, clear of trees, stumps and chuck holes. Already there is a decided change in the appearance of the street, where humps have been removed and the sand thrown into gaping holes.

Two streets running north and south, Monte Verde and Camino Real, are also under contract to be improved at this time, and every day requests are being made that action be taken for the improvement of other streets.

The Boys' Club

By Miss I. A. JOHNSON

The Boys' Club has held its meetings during the summer with a few intervals, owing to other activities, such as the plays, concerts and the visit of the fleet.

Some of the regular members were away and others working, but fourteen of the summer visitors took their places.

We had interesting talks by Mrs. V. M. Porter on "Irish Legends," Perry Newberry, Philip Wilson Jr., Winsor Josselyn and Mr. Bates on war experiences.

A beach supper added to the joy of membership, and a "hike" nearly came to pass.

There is serious thought of dividing the club, and we would like someone to volunteer to take the younger boys. It means work and preparation, but is interesting and worth while. If there is anyone who is willing to take up this work with a dozen boys nine to thirteen years old, please communicate with Miss Culbertson or Miss Johnson as soon as possible.

Two More Letters Concerning Carmel Streets

Carmel, Cal., Sept. 15
Mr. W. L. Overstreet,
Editor, Carmel Pine Cone.

Dear Sir:

In view of the fact that improvement of Ocean Avenue is contemplated, a few remarks from one who is in favor of first class streets may be in order.

Our city trustees should be commended for having accomplished the considerable task of having the survey made and plans drawn up, and it is to be regretted that the work of paving was delayed by the lack of a very small number of votes at the recent election.

The saying, "The best is the cheapest in the long run," is surely applicable in this case. A dirt or gravel street without proper drainage system would last possibly two weeks in the rainy season when Ocean Avenue is more like a river than a street. Such street and drainage system, I am informed, would at this time cost about as much as the proposed concrete street.

Regarding Lincoln Street, which has always been held up as a shining example, I have made some photographs of that street in the main part of town, showing its disgraceful condition, and would be glad to submit them to any authority on road making. If it is his opinion that Lincoln Street is a feasible proposition, I will stand corrected.

Not only should Ocean Avenue be paved, but there should be a first class street connecting the Pebble Beach road with Ocean Avenue to allow the residents and sojourners at that place easy access to Carmel. When the State highway is completed through to the south numbers of people would go over the 17 Mile Drive and through our town to join the highway again. Why not encourage them to come this way by providing respectable streets, and enjoy the resulting prosperity!

It seems incredible that any business house on Ocean Ave. should oppose paying it on account of the expense. Now, I haven't very much money but I would consider the necessary amount well spent, as it would be returned in a short time through increased business, which is now lost, to say nothing of the increased property value. As the payments would extend over a number of years, it would probably work no hardship on anyone.

It is also humiliating to hear every day ridicule from prominent

Carmel, Cal., Sept. 12
W. L. Overstreet,
Weekly Pine Cone,

Dear Sir:

As a business man and Carmel property owner I must make corrections and take exceptions to several statements made by Mrs. Cooke in your issue of Sept. 11.

That estimable lady must know that in order to get "roads" it was not necessary to incorporate. She mentions Lincoln Avenue. Was the village incorporated when that thoroughfare was improved? She must know, too, that the town government (Trustees) have nothing to do with financing initial street work. That is solely and fully up to the property owners.

The lady writes: "Most of the property here is held by people of small means." It is so in all small towns. We cannot all own Market and Kearny property.

Again she says: "The paving of Ocean Avenue . . . wouldn't help the growth of the town . . . any more than having the road done with the same excellent material as was used on Lincoln Avenue."

One does not have to be an engineer to know what would happen to Ocean Avenue in the rainy season were this course to be pursued.

I am willing to admit that the 25-75 bond proposition was ill-advised, but in all fairness I must say it was not initiated by the Trustees. Many of those who voted for it did so because it was a step in the right direction.

To quote again: "If we'd been given anything in the way of streets to keep us in good humor," etc.

Given! By whom? Surely not the Trustees. They have nothing to give in this line, even if they would. It's up to the property owners.

JUSTICE

and successful business men, who are surprised at the lack of civic pride in allowing such apologies for streets to exist, and vowing that they will never return.

It is not a question whether we can afford good streets, but whether we can afford not to have them.

Let us have plenty of good streets, and without delay.
