Restaurants reopen to scores of happy but cautious customers

By MARY SCHLEY, CHRIS COUNTS and KELLY NIX

STEEP DECLINES in coronavirus infections and increased vaccination rates moved Monterey County into the Red Tier this week, prompting restaurant owners throughout the Peninsula and down the coast to fling open their doors and welcome diners inside for the first time since early last July.

Many reported immediate upticks in business and expressed cautious optimism, especially as they and more of their employees and customers receive vaccinations against coronavirus.

Busy town gets busier

Gabe Georis, owner of Pescadero restaurant and adjacent Barmel, and who is now overseeing La Bicycleette following the recent passing of his father, Gaston Georis, reopened his two restaurants for indoor dining at 25 percent capacity Wednesday and said he saw 30 percent more business than when people could only eat outside. La Bicycleette will reopen to interior seating Friday.

Georis has already hired about a half-dozen more people to work at Barmel and Pescadero, in light of the reopening, and brought three or four former workers back to La Bicycleette, which has managed to stay busier and therefore didn't require as much ramping up.

State prisons may be at herd immunity

By KELLY NIX

THE COMBINATION of a widespread vaccination program and large numbers of coronavirus infections among inmates at one state prison in Monterey County has the facility near the threshold for herd immunity, according to California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation data.

The state prison system reported Wednesday that in the past two weeks there were only three dozen new coronavirus cases among inmates at all of California's 35 correctional institutions — a stunning decline from the 10,617 cases the CDCR reported over a 14-day period in late December.

At least 70 percent

Because so many California prisoners have been infected, and more recently, vaccinated, one-fifth of the state's prisons have reached the herd immunity threshold, CDCR data indicates. Many experts say that at least 70 percent of a population needs to be immune to halt the spread of the

PANETTA SILENT AS BORDER SITUATION WORSENS

By KELLY NIX

CONGRESSMAN JIMMY Panetta this week declined to answer questions about the immigration emergency at the southwest border of the United States, which saw more than 100,000 migrants cross into the country in February, according to U.S. Customs and Border Protection.

Media reports say about 6,000 people are arriving at the southern border each day — many of them hoping to claim asylum, which could get them instant legal status in the United States and access to jobs and a panoply of taxpayer-funded benefits.

Overflowing

The Pine Cone sent numerous questions to Panetta — through communications director Sarah Cronin — about the current challenges at the southern border. But the Democratic representative, who was highly critical of former President Donald Trump's immigration policies, did not answer them. Instead, Cronin emailed The Pine Cone late Thursday morning — five business days after the newspaper submitted the questions.

“Given a busy congressional schedule this week due to the introduction and passage of several critical pieces of legislation, we are unable to provide the thoughtful an-

Shucks welcomed diners inside Wednesday for the first time in more than eight months, thanks to the county's move from the highly restrictive Purple Tier to the less restrictive Red. Vaccinations, like the one city administrator Chip Kerig received Wednesday morning (see page 11A), are helping to curb infections.

Homeowner blasts county for flood response

By CHRIS COUNTS

SEVEN WEEKS after at least a dozen homes were flooded along the edge of Carmel River Lagoon, resident Katie Owen blamed the county for more than $2 million in damage to homes and more than $20 million in lost property values due to flooding Jan. 28. Her own home was hit with $150,000 in damages, she said.

“The county did so many things wrong,” said Owen, who made a lengthy presentation during an online public meeting March 11. She called the county's response to the inundation “incredibly slow.”

Where were the pumps?

The flooding began around 2 a.m., with homes along Camino Real, River Park Place and Monte Verde Street sustaining the worst damage. Just days earlier, Monterey County Public Works had cut a channel in the Carmel River Lagoon sandbar to help lower the water level in the lagoon in anticipation of heavy rain.

But Owen contends that county workers didn't create a deep enough channel even though the permit issued by the Army Corps of Engineers allowed them to. She suggested the work could have been done with hand tools overnight.

Owen also said the county did not set up pumps along the edge of the lagoon before the storm arrived.

“They should have been in operation Wednesday evening when the rain started coming down heavily,” said Owen. “They didn't set up the first pump until 4:44 a.m.”

She took issue with the county's contention that it was monitoring the area for flooding all night. “Our security cameras don't show them monitoring our sandbag wall until 3:33 a.m., after the street had already flooded,” said Owen, whose family has had a home along River Park Place since 1971.

Tiny trail runner

She is a 6-year-old Chihuahua-Yorkshire terrier – a “Chorkie,” says the family who rescued her at 7 months, when she was a scroungy little orphan they fluffed and buffed and named Olive.

Her person, a horsewoman, started taking Olive riding in Garland Park, tucked into a little pack on the saddle. One day, she wondered what the little 8-pound pup would do if she put her down alongside the horse, and let her run. Turns out, she loves it.

“People are amazed,” her person said. “I carry her through the parking lot and set her on a bench. She jumps from there up into the saddle, so I have to be ready to catch her. Once inside the park, I set her on the trail. Olive will run 5-8 miles, and swim across Carmel River when we cross.”

Olive actually runs about 50 miles a week and never seems to tire. If her person tries to pick her up before she’s ready, she won’t accept the ride.

Olive’s trail companion is Custer, a 9-year-old, very patient palomino quarter horse. He not only doesn’t seem to mind Olive’s attention, he watches and waits for her.

Olive also likes to go to the beach, just down the street from her Pacific Grove home. She gets there on the back of her person’s e-bike, and then races across the sand, splashes into the water, or climbs up the rocks “like a little mountain goat.”

“Olive goes everywhere with us, but she really loves to run with horses,” her person said. “She’s not typical of a cow dog or a trail dog, she’s a tiny thing that just loves to run.”

At home, rather than relaxing, Olive gets up on her hind legs and dances across the room.

“We’ve really been gifted with this little character,” her person said. “We just love her.”

City to end year with $2.6M surplus

By MARY SCHLEY

CONSERVATIVE BUDGETING in the face of the coronavirus pandemic has put the city on track to finish the 2020-2021 fiscal year with an unprecedented $2.6 million surplus, Sharon Friedrichsen, the director of budgets and contracts, told the city council during a special meeting March 16. The savings are in part due to the axing of most capital projects, employees taking voluntary pay cuts, and layoffs, augmented by better than expected income from property, hotel and sales taxes.

City administrator Chip Rerig described this year's budget as "conservative and effective."

"Everyone took a haircut," he said. "Even me."

Quick recovery in forecast

Friedrichsen presented her five-year budget forecast, which anticipates steady increases in revenues, from $23,686,040 in 2021-2022 to $27,670,789 in 2025-2026, and rising costs, with end-of-year surpluses running between a low of $669,986 five years from now and $1,279,129 in 2023-2024.

By comparison, the budget for the cur-

A 30-YEAR-OLD Pacific Grove crashed his 2008 Mercedes off 17 Mile Drive onto kelp and rocks on a beach near Cypress Point Saturday afternoon around 1:30 p.m., according to California Highway Patrol public information officer Jessica Madueño. The beach is used by harbor seals for pupping each year, usually beginning in April.

Madueño said the cause of Ryan Todd's crash remains under investigation but noted he was using a cell phone at the time, while Cal Fire Battalion Chief Josh Silveira said Todd had been heading toward Bird Rock when he swerved to avoid a deer and lost control of the car.

"The driver turned to miss a deer and was unable to correct before crashing through the fence and ending up on Fan Shell Beach," Silveira said. "The incident was non-injury for both humans and animals."

Verdicts, pleas and sentencings announced by Monterey County District Attorney Jeannine Pacioni

Feb. 2 — As part of a sweeping effort to battle pandemic-related fraud in Monterey County, seven individuals have been charged with unemployment insurance fraud, the D.A. announced. Five are Monterey County jail inmates: Tony Nguyen Tran, Lanh Van Truong, Juan Castillo Lopez, Zachary Don Dobbs and Lenny Westley Sanks. Two persons, Reynaldo Garcia Gomez and Nicole Ramona Sanks, were not incarcerated when the fraud occurred.

The defendants are charged with felony counts of conspiracy, making fraudulent statements in unemployment insurance applications, and two counts of money laundering. Two of the defendants have prior serious or violent strike allegations. One of the defendants is pending trial for murder. The total fraud involved in this case exceeds $40,000. Many more arrests and charges are expected from the multi-agency task force led by the Monterey County District Attorney's Office and the Monterey County Sheriff's Office.

Emergency federal and state unemployment insurance benefits were made available through the California Employment Development Department to assist people during the pandemic. To respond to the crisis, the EDD dispensed with many standard application vetting practices. Consequently, many people fraudulently took advantage of the emergency to apply for benefits they were not entitled to receive. In July of last year, the Monterey County Sheriff's Office and Salinas Police Department learned of widespread fraud involving inmates at the Monterey County Jail applying for and receiving unemployment benefits for periods during which they were incarcerated. Persons in jail or prison are not "available to work" and are therefore ineligible for unemployment assistance.

District Attorney Jeannine M. Pacioni and Sheriff Steve Bernal formed a task force to investigate the fraud. The Monterey Police Department, Marina Police Department, and CSUMB police joined the task force. The task force, with assistance from state EDD and federal investigators, continues to investigate hundreds of suspects, both jail inmates and their outside accomplices.

Feb. 4 — Judge Carrie M. Panetta sentenced Ramon Rangel Mendoza, 60, a former resident of Soledad, to 25 years in the state prison after he pled no contest to three felony counts of Penal Code § 288(b)(1): lewd and lascivious acts with a child under 14 years of age, involving force or duress.

In December 2019, 14-year-old Jane Doe disclosed to her mother that Mendoza, a family friend and former roommate, had molested her when she was 7 to 9 years old. This was immediately reported to law

County stymied in search for new ambulance service

By MARY SCHLEY

MONTEREY COUNTY and its ambulance provider, American Medical Response, are in a stalemate over a contract county officials want, but the company isn't interested in signing. County officials have spent years hammering out and tweaking an extensive plan for ambulance coverage over the next 10 years, but AMR says it's cost prohibitive and unsafe.

The county sought bids from ambulance companies but received none by last Friday's deadline.

AMR has covered most of the county for decades — other than a brief stint when another company took over and then had to be bailed out because it ran out of money — and has a contract in place through January 2022. But the county's idea of how ambulance service should operate is "too flawed" to work with, according to a March 5 letter from AMR regional director Michael Esslinger.

With some 30,000 employees across the country, AMR is one of the nation's largest private companies providing emergency medical services and transport. It's not responsible for ambulance service in Carmel-by-the-Sea and Carmel Valley, since those areas have their own companies, though often an AMR ambulance will respond to a medical call within their boundaries if it's closer, and vice versa.

But that crucial arrangement, which ensures that someone in need of critical care gets it as soon as possible, regardless of jurisdiction, would be jeopardized under the county's new model. The contract would limit the number of times the county's ambulance company can request help from the Carmel or Carmel Valley ambulance when one of them is closer to a medical call, and would financially penalize the county ambulance for doing so.

Numbers don't add up

The county's requirements for its next ambulance provider, which would sign a 10-year contract, also don't make financial sense, according to Esslinger, because they include an 8-minute response time in areas

See AMBULANCE page 30A

American Medical Response ambulances respond to medical emergencies and help with major disasters in most of Monterey County, but the company and county government are at loggerheads over how those services should operate and what they should cost.

Bakery shooter faces attempted murder charge

By KELLY NIX

THE WOMAN who was charged with shooting and injuring her husband's coworker outside a French bakery in Pacific Grove in the early morning hours last summer is now facing a new charge for trying to kill him, according to court records.

Jennifer Nicole Razo is being held in Monterey County Jail for the attempted murder of Lucia Pulido on Aug. 18, 2020 outside Patisserie Bechler. Pulido was shot but survived. Razo is now facing a second attempted murder charge for her plans to kill her husband, Leopoldo Razo, who was inside the bakery the morning of the shooting.

Police said Razo — who was 39 years old when the incident occurred — was in the parking lot of the bakery on Forest Avenue at about 4:40 a.m. when she shot Pulido.

Following a March 4 preliminary hearing, Monterey County Superior Court Judge Rafael Vazquez found there was sufficient evidence to believe Razo committed two counts of attempted premeditated murder, shooting at an occupied vehicle, and two counts of assault with a semiautomatic firearm, and he ordered her to stand trial. Razo also faces several enhancements, including causing great bodily injury. She's being held in Monterey County Jail. Her bail has increased to $2,030,000.

Pacific Grove police said Razo shot Pulido as she was arriving to work. Though injured, Pulido made her way into the bakery where Leopoldo Razo was, and they locked themselves in until police arrived. Razo then held officers in a two-hour standoff in which she threatened to shoot herself.

She was taken into custody at about 7 a.m., though. Razo has pleaded not guilty to the charges.

Someone with knowledge of the crime told The Pine Cone last year that Razo carried out the attack because she believed her estranged husband was in a relationship with Pulido.

At Razo's preliminary hearing, she was represented by Monterey County public defenders Michelle Wouden and Jennifer Davenport, while deputy district attorney John Roman represented the people. Several Pacific Grove police officers testified at the hearing, and photographs and medical records for Pulido were introduced as evidence.

Pacific Grove man charged with stealing from ambulance

By KELLY NIX

AN 18-YEAR-OLD Pacific Grove man who prosecutors said committed numerous crimes in the city in one day — including stealing from an ambulance and defacing a cop car — has been arrested.

Pacific Grove police said that at about 10:30 a.m. Feb. 25, Christopher Gleason opened the back of an ambulance that was parked on Fountain Avenue and helped himself to a box of supplies.

"He took a box of non-narcotic medications," police spokeswoman Jocelyn Francis told the Pine Cone.

Gleason was also in possession of a "concealed switchblade" knife and resisted officers by locking his arms to prevent them from handcuffing him, police said. He was taken into custody at 10:45 a.m.

Illegal entry, too

A Monterey County District Attorney's Office criminal complaint filed against Gleason also indicates he was unlawfully in possession of a "dagger concealed on his person." The ambulance Gleason is alleged to have stolen from is owned by American Medical Response.

Although Pacific Grove police initially concealed the crime from the press, The Pine Cone learned that on the same day, Gleason is believed to have vandalized a police car. A separate complaint was filed for those crimes.

Gleason "did willfully, unlawfully and maliciously deface with graffiti and other inscribed material" damage and "destroy real and personal property, to wit, a patrol vehicle," court documents say.

The damage was determined to be less than $400.

Prosecutors say that same day, Gleason also illegally got into someone's house, though it's not clear if that happened before or after the police cruiser was vandalized. He's been charged with that, too. Both crimes are misdemeanors.

Gleason "did unlawfully enter and remain in a noncommercial dwelling house, apartment and other residential place without consent of the owner, owner's agent and the person in lawful possession thereof," the complaint says.

Not answering questions

A Pacific Grove police log says Gleason was taken to Monterey County Jail after being arrested for the ambulance theft, resisting arrest and knife charges that morning. It's unclear when he made bail. It's also unclear what time of the day the PGPD patrol car was vandalized and the home break-in occurred.

The Pacific Grove Police Department did not respond to questions about the unlawful entry or damage to the police vehicle — including if the car had been locked, the nature of the graffiti and where it occurred.

P.G. MOVES TO REGULATE PARKLETS

By KELLY NIX

THE PACIFIC Grove Planning Commission will weigh the idea of regulating the city's parklets, which have helped restaurant owners stay afloat during the coronavirus pandemic.

Some of the parklets popped up shortly after indoor dining was banned at the start of the coronavirus emergency in Monterey County on March 18, 2020. More permanent versions were erected when another ban was instituted July 8, 2000.

Even with indoor dining resuming, many of the restaurants would like to keep their parklets indefinitely, but there are also calls to regulate the spaces, which the planning commission will consider April 8.

Pacific Grove Chamber of Commerce President Moe Ammar said the topic had been included on this week's planning commission agenda but that he requested it be postponed so the chamber could have more time to form a position on the issue. Commission chair Steven Lilley granted Ammar's request.

"We would love to see all outdoor dining remain in place," Ammar told The Pine Cone last week. "It was the chamber and downtown business improvement district that recommended parklets instead of street closures. All the restaurants are happy and want to keep them forever."

The designated outdoor eating areas — which have cost some restaurant owners more than $20,000 to build — look as if they're here to stay.

"The parklet program has been well received by the city council, community, chamber and visitors — among other groups," city manager Ben Harvey told The Pine Cone.

Would be approved

Restaurateurs must obtain an annual encroachment permit from the city for the parklets.

As long as owners adhere to the conditions of the permit and are in good standing with city hall, Harvey said they could apply for permit renewals "and would receive approval from the city."

The city council last year waived the permit fees, and Harvey said he would recommend it do the same for this year.

"This is in light of the Covid-19 pandemic and corresponding shelter-in-place order and the extraordinary circumstances" restaurant owners "have been confronted with," Harvey said.

Pacific Grove associate planner Laurel O'Halloran and building official John Kuehl spearheaded the parklet program, with Harvey's backing.

Restaurants are second to hotels as tax-revenue generators for the city.

Health officials cite positive trends and county moves out of worst tier

By KELLY NIX

ON THE day marking the 1-year anniversary of the coronavirus lockdown, Monterey County was given the green light to move into a less restrictive reopening category, allowing indoor dining to resume, gyms to reopen and children to go back to the classroom.

On Wednesday, the county was allowed to move from the Purple Tier to the Red Tier, which will undoubtedly help County businesses that have suffered staggering economic losses. The state only allows restaurants and movie theaters to operate at 25 percent capacity, and gyms and fitness studios at 10 percent.

President of the Monterey County Hospitality Association Janine Chicourrat pointed to what she said were $1.8 billion in losses to the tourism industry. She also said it's nowhere close to recovering, despite the easing of restrictions.

"People are excited, I think, to be moving into the Red Tier," Chicourrat told reporters Wednesday. "But it's still highly restrictive. It means we can't do groups in our hotels, and we can't do weddings." And a restaurant that has 50 seats could only start serving 12 of them, she said.

Welcome back

There were about 27,000 people employed in the county's hospitality industry before the pandemic. Portola Hotel & Spa at Monterey Bay, which Chicourrat manages, is at about 15 percent of staffing, while the busiest, based on her interviews with the managers of a handful of the county's five largest hotels, is at 40 percent.

"We are nowhere near getting our workers back," she said.

While many Monterey Peninsula restaurants this week wasted no time in welcoming back patrons for indoor dining, it's unclear when other business sectors, such as museums, will reopen now that they can.

For instance, Monterey Bay Aquarium executive director Julie Packard said that while she's grateful the county is in the Red Tier, she's not sure when the aquarium will open its doors. The aquarium is also only able to operate at 25 percent.

"We're now gearing up to reopen Monterey Bay Aquarium, for the first time in more than a year," Packard said in a statement posted on the aquarium's website. "We have a lot to do before we can welcome back guests. We'll announce details and dates of our reopening in the next few weeks."

Although the Pacific Grove Museum of Natural History Wednesday emailed a newsletter about the "virtual" events it's hosting, there was no mention of reopening its doors, and museum officials did not respond to a message seeking comment.

Cinemark Monterey 13, the movie theater at Del Monte Shopping Center, said this week it's considering reopening on Friday, while a spokesman for the much smaller Lighthouse 4 movie theater in Pacific Grove doesn't yet have a reopening date but said he might have a better idea in two weeks.

Herd immunity

Monterey County health officer Dr. Ed Moreno told the county board of supervisors Tuesday that coronavirus infections continue to plummet in Monterey County.

"The metrics continue to improve and the number of people vaccinated continues to increase," Moreno said.

Over the last seven days, there were 24,800 vaccine doses administered to Monterey County residents, according to the state department of public health. The week before, ending March 10, there were 13,800.

A total of 116,543 doses of vaccine have been administered to county residents, the state health department reported.

As of Thursday, there were 24 new coronavirus cases in Monterey County and a total of 25 hospitalizations, which also continue to drop. There was one new death attributed to Covid-19, for a total of 338.

Moreno did not have an idea when Monterey County would be able to move into the even less restrictive Orange Tier but noted the county must remain in the Red Tier for three weeks in order to be eligible for Orange.

During a media briefing Wednesday, Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula infectious disease specialist Dr. Martha Blum said health professionals can now see "the light at the end of the tunnel," and she pointed to the vaccines manufactured by three companies being distributed in the United States, saying they are safe and effective.

County healthcare workers, Blum said, are proof the vaccines are working.

"We've seen just a tremendous disappearance of any symptoms or transmission within the healthcare workforce" and she said Monterey County is on its way toward achieving herd immunity.

Blum also noted the deep physical, emotional and financial losses due to the Covid-19 pandemic.

"We've had over 1,600 cases, about 625 admissions and 80 deaths at Community Hospital, the last one just last evening," Blum said. "So it's really been a big toll."

Group wants to turn NOAA building into art and science center

By CHRIS COUNTS

THE FEDERAL government plans to sell the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration building in Pacific Grove, and a group led by gallery owner and writer Steve Hauk wants to find someone to buy it and repurpose it as a “resource center of ocean art, science and technology.”

The group made a presentation at Wednesday’s Pacific Grove City Council meeting. While they are asking the City of Pacific Grove to back their idea, they say they have no plans to ask the city for any money.

“With the right vision, we propose that the building — with sea murals by Guggenheim-honored artist Ray Troll, and overlooking Monterey Bay and the Great Tide Pool — could be transformed into an environmentally appropriate public work space and art gallery, enabling the convergence of cutting-edge marine scientific and technological innovation with ocean-inspired art and virtual reality,” the plan suggests.

Hauk’s group also includes Charles Greene and Darcie Fohrman. Greene is Professor of Earth and Atmospheric Sciences at Cornell University in Ithaca, N.Y., while Fohrman is a Pacific Grove resident and consultant who works with museums creating exhibits.

Feds seek one buyer

Perhaps the biggest hurdle facing the group is the news that the feds want to sell the building by this summer, and they want to package it with 11 other properties so they can sell the lot to a single buyer.

“I think this property may be the smallest one,” Greene told The Pine Cone.

While those circumstances might suggest that the group has little chance of competing with deep-pocketed bidders, Greene pointed out that there are very few things a buyer could possibly do with the building and land due to its sensitive location, which is zoned for open space.

“Because it falls in the Coastal Zone, it would be hard for anyone to come in there and do any significant development,” he said.

Before trying to acquire the building and land, Greene said his group first wants to see if there’s local interest in the project.

“We want to make sure the community sees what we are trying to do and supports the concept,” he explained. “If the public isn’t behind it, we won’t go forward.”

Greene conceded there are still many details to work out with the plan, and he and his colleagues are open to ideas. “We realize there’s a lot of homework to do,” he said.

One feature Greene said he would like to see is a trolley that would transport people from downtown Pacific Grove, and thereby reduce traffic at the site.

Turn off the light

The soon-to-be-sold NOAA building was last in the local news in 2010, when the feds installed “six towering, solar-powered lamps” atop 20-foot poles. “NOAA cited national security issues and concerns over mountain lions for the reasons for the solar lights,” The Pine Cone reported.

Firefighters help vaccinate homeless

■ Carmel workers also get inoculated

By MARY SCHLEY

MONTEREY FIREFIGHTERS administered their highest number of coronavirus vaccines in a single day Tuesday, when they gave the shots to nearly 300 homeless people at clinics in Monterey and Seaside, according to Monterey Fire Chief Gaudenz Panholzer. Since getting authorization from the state to transport and administer the vaccine, the Monterey Fire Department has been working with the county to get allocations of vaccinations and distribute them.

The morning clinic was held at Gathering for Women, an organization on El Dorado Street in Monterey that assists transient women with clothing, toiletries, hot meals, showers, food, and other types of support and services. Panholzer said 137 people received the one-shot Johnson & Johnson vaccine there.

In the afternoon, MFD teamed up with Seaside Fire to administer doses at the Monterey Peninsula College Public Safety Training Center, where 157 individuals were inoc-

Every Drop Counts

Fix a Leak Week reminds people to check plumbing fixtures and irrigation systems for leaks. Simple fixes can save a lot.

Here are a few simple ways to detect leaks in your home:

- If winter water use exceeds 6 CCF, that might signal a leak.
- Check for loose or missing drip emitters on your irrigation system.
- A leaky faucet that drips at the rate of one drip per second can waste more than 3,000 gallons per year.

ulated. The total of 294 was nearly double the previous highest single-day number. "So far, the busiest has been 150, total," he said before the final tally for March 16 came in. Panholzer said his department worked closely with police officers — who know a lot of their cities' homeless residents — the Monterey recreation department and other agencies and organizations to locate and reach out to help them get vaccinated. With their communal living situations and other factors, he said, working to prevent the spread of coronavirus in their communities is critical. While no more homeless vaccine clinics are on the calendar at the moment, Panholzer said he hopes to hold more of them. And, he noted, the recipients were "really happy" to be getting the shots. "They were very pleased," he said.

Meanwhile, Carmel municipal employees — including city administrator Chip Rerig — received the Johnson & Johnson coronavirus vaccine at a clinic set up in the Vista Lobos building at Torres and Third Wednesday morning. Paramedics who work on the city's ambulances administered the shots. Rerig told The Pine Cone most of the city's police officers and paramedics have already been vaccinated, and the rest of the 40 or so workers qualify for inoculation now as disaster workers, since any of them could be asked to help out in the case of a major emergency or natural disaster. A poll sent to employees last week indicated most were interested in getting vaccinated, according to Rerig. He said 57 people received shots at the March 16 clinic, including a few California Highway Patrol officers, City of Seaside employees and Pacific Grove city manager Ben Harvey. Longtime paramedic David Jedinak said administering the vaccines was unprecedented. "It might be one of the best days ever as a medic in our community," he said. "Just so rewarding." The Monterey Fire Department has been working through the Monterey County health department to administer vaccines, starting with firefighters and other staff in early January, according to chief Gaudenz Panholzer. "The people we've worked with at county health have been supportive and helpful," the fire chief said. "I'm feeling good that it seems like we're getting more vaccine moving and will continue to stay in the supply chain so we can get more." So far, he estimated, Monterey Fire has administered more than 1,200 doses.

City hall reopening?

Because the state authorized the fire department to administer the vaccine, firefighters have to have custody of it until it arrives at the shot clinics. "There are critical storage and transportation rules, so we have a system for all of that," he said. Panholzer estimated as much as 80 percent of the Monterey Fire department's staff has received the shot, and he noted that the reasons people decline to take it vary, including lack of belief or trust in vaccines and delaying due to positive coronavirus tests. He said he's aware of three fire department employees who caught the disease, while Rerig said no one on the city payroll has had it. Vaccinating city staff could be a key step toward reopening city hall, though Rerig said plans on how to go about it are still vague. "Are we going to have someone in the front hallway who acts in the triage capacity? What's the format going to look like?" he asked. "There may be people coming in who are not vaccinated, and I can't force my employees to be vaccinated, obviously." While Rerig doesn't know how city hall will operate, he said he's working with a consultant to devise the best ways to accommodate the public while keeping his staff safe. "We have an outside professional who's helping us put together a plan," he said.

She also complained that the meeting didn't give everybody a chance to speak. "Lots of voices weren't heard," she said.

Lorin Letendre, who chairs the local flood control district, said the water level in the lagoon shouldn't have been higher than 12.77 feet above sea level, but during the Jan. 28 storm, "it was allowed to get to 15.5 feet."

And Letendre said two things are needed "to make sure this never happens again."

"The county needs to do a better job of sandbar management, and that includes finding a way to control the runoff that collects behind the sandbags," Letendre said. "As for the residents, I suggest the county work out a settlement of the claims. It will save a lot of time and attorney fees."

'Learned so much'

After the meeting, county supervisor Mary Adams told The Pine Cone that she was impressed with Owen's presentation. "She was well prepared, respectful and knowledgeable," Adams said. "We all learned so much from what she brought forward."

Because legal action appears likely, Adams said she and county representatives were limited in what they could say at the meeting in response to questions and public comments.

"We had been informed that we needed to be conscious of fact that people would be filing lawsuits," she said. "And anything we said could be used against us in court."

In response to complaints that the county's public works department didn't do enough, Adams noted that there were emergencies happening up and down the coast that evening, including the collapse of Highway 1 at Rat Creek in Big Sur, the widespread failure of Nacimiento Fergusson Road, and mudslides damaging homes on River Road. As a result, work crews were spread thin that night. "There was chaos," she suggested.

Adams also noted that work crews were limited in what they could do because the conditions were dangerous, particularly out on the Carmel River Lagoon sandbar that evening, with heavy rain falling and little visibility. "The safety of workers is paramount," she explained.

The supervisor said the objective of the meeting was to hear from residents. "I'm a strong believer that we get our best information from people who are living with a problem versus those who are working on a problem," Adams said.

While some complained their questions weren't answered, the supervisor said she and her staff are working on it. "My staff has been reaching out to everyone," she said.

Adams conceded the ongoing problem of homes being flooded along the edge of the lagoon doesn't have an easy answer.

"There is no ideal solution to this," she added. "I think there are some new solutions needed that we haven't thought of yet. It's a very challenging issue — we need to have compromises from all the parties involved. We're going to continue to meet, look at suggestions, and see what we can do to move forward."

swers on a complex issue such as this merits," Cronin said.

Among The Pine Cone's questions were whether Panetta supported the way the Biden administration was handling its detention of migrant children, whether the country should place a limit on the number of migrants the United States accepts under its asylum program, and if migrants should be required to test negative for coronavirus before being admitted to the country.

Panetta was outspoken about former President Donald Trump's immigration policies. In January 2020 he traveled with members of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus to Brownsville, Texas, and Matamoros, Mexico, to "investigate the impacts" of Trump's migrant protection protocols, which Panetta called "dangerous, and in some cases deadly."

"This policy has shut the door on families and denied legal pathways to asylum and safety," Panetta said at the time.

To facilitate crossings at the southwest border this year, the Biden administration recruited nearly 600 volunteers and directed the Federal Emergency Management Agency to assist with large numbers of migrant children, many of them unaccompanied.

'Crowded with children'

In February, there were 100,441 border crossings, compared to 36,687 crossings in February 2020, when Trump was in office. U.S. Homeland Security Secretary Alejandro N. Mayorkas acknowledged this week that border facilities are crowded and said the department of Health and Human Services "has not had the capacity to intake the number of unaccompanied children we have been encountering."

A border protection facility in Donna, Texas this week was operating at 729 percent of capacity, forcing children to "take turns sleeping on the floor," according to Neha Desai, a lawyer representing youth in U.S. government custody, CBS News reported.

About 30 percent of the restaurants' employees have been vaccinated so far, as have all the managers. "I'm trying to help everyone who wants it get it," he said, since getting appointments takes a lot of effort, given the ongoing scarcity of vaccine supply in Monterey County.

Georis noted the increasing number of people being vaccinated is uplifting, especially in a community that has so many older residents. "I have talked to people who said they were out for the first time in a year, because they got vaccinated," he said. "So that's encouraging."

Mary Crowe, an executive with the company that owns La Playa and Hotel Carmel and their restaurants, Bud's and Brophy's, said both were open for indoor dining Wednesday and did robust business.

"It went really well," she said. Crowe, who also lives in Carmel, was especially happy to see a lot of the regular customers at both spots. "It just felt nice and normal to see people inside."

Her company didn't lay anyone off, but now, the number of employees is growing. "We kept all of our food service staff employed the whole time, but we did hire two additional people to help us keep up with what we know will be a greater level of business at both places," she said. Many have also been vaccinated.

Smiling faces

Longtime restaurateur Tony Salameh reopened Anton & Michel for indoor dining Wednesday, adding 30 seats to complement the 40 he has on the patio in the Court of the Fountains.

"I have been lucky having the courtyard patio behind the restaurant, which allowed me to keep the majority of my staff employed," he said. "Actually, September and October 2020 were my best September and October on record since I opened in 1980," thanks to outdoor dining running from 4 to 9:30 p.m., enabling the restaurant to serve a lot of people.

"Last night, we did very well for dinner with half seated indoors and half outdoors," Salameh said. "The demand for outdoor dining is still very strong, as many don't feel comfortable being indoors."

The restaurant is also seeing a lot of requests for rehearsal dinners and small wedding receptions during the coming summer and fall, but corporate business "is totally gone for now and probably through the rest of the year," he said.

Many Anton & Michel employees have gotten vaccinated. "And, hopefully, as our patrons get vaccinated, they will feel more comfortable coming back to dine indoors," he said.

Rich Pepe, who owns Carmel Bakery, Little Napoli — celebrating 30 years in business — and Vesuvio, said he and wife Sandra have been vaccinated, as have a few of their employees, and he's trying to help everyone get appointments.

"We have brought back about 80 percent of our staff, and I'm hopeful as the re-opening tiers progress, we can fully rehire 100 percent," he added.

Pepe, who is also president of the Visit Carmel tourism group board, said innkeepers "are reporting an accelerated demand

Martha (Marty) Wilcoxson Jordan

November 14, 1929 - February 17, 2021

Martha was born in Carrollton, MO. to James and Elizabeth (McQueen) Wilcoxson. Martha grew up with and adored her two sisters Nancy (Magee) and Barbara (Icenogle).

Martha attended and graduated from Carrollton High School. She went on to Monticello College and transferred to Missouri University in Columbia where she studied education and pledged as a Kappa. This is also where she met the love of her life, Harold Roy Jordan at an SAE event. Martha and Hal continued for the rest of their lives to be avid Missouri University fans and supporters.

Martha & Hal were married in 1952. Their first born, Harold (Roy) was born in Columbia, MO. The family of three, with one on the way, moved out to California in the fall of 1956. They first lived in Berkeley, then moved to Montclair, where two more children were born and finally settled in Piedmont where they had their fifth to complete their "tribe of five."

Martha was an active homemaker being incredibly involved and taking much joy in her children's school life as well as Boy Scouts and Camp Fire Girls and many numerous family activities.

In 1963 Martha & Hal built a second home in Pebble Beach which became a place they enjoyed during summer vacations and many weekends with their children and numerous friends and family. Martha & Hal soon became members of the Monterey Peninsula Country Club where they enjoyed many years of activities and events. Martha kept up her great love of tennis at the Carmel Valley Racquet Club.

Martha and Hal were members and supporters of the Church in the Forest for over forty years. Martha was a volunteer in the Altar Guild for 15 years where for many years "Marty led the Altar Care Team, which kept the chapel sparkling, with her 'holy housekeeping' and was legendary for her dedication and high level of care."

In 1973 Martha & Hal began Sea Cruz'n. They took many luxurious cruises traveling worldwide. With their passion for travel, they invested in many timeshares which allowed them to continue traveling extensively.

In 1998, Martha & Hal retired to the home in Pebble Beach and continued their love of travel. When they were not traveling the globe, they maintained an active social life throughout the Peninsula at the Church in the Forest as well as their dance group (PDQ) and her local Kappa alumni chapter. Martha volunteered for many years at the Discovery Shop (American Cancer Society) where she developed many lifelong, cherished friendships.

Martha loved big bands, classic jazz vocals as well as watching classic movies in her later years. Martha & Hal volunteered many years for the Monterey Dixieland Jazz Festival, Sun Valley & New Orleans Jazz Festivals. More than anything Martha was happiest when she was surrounded by her children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren.

Martha is survived by four of her five children, Harold (Roy), Melinda (Klescewski), Kent (Wilcoxson) & Pamela, (her middle daughter Sarah passed away after a long illness in 2020), her grandchildren, Jordan Klescewski, Julia McKinley (and two great-granddaughters Jordyn and Jayde), Maxwell Jordan, her brother-in-law Ed Jordan (Dallas, TX), and numerous nieces and nephews.

Our mother was one of God's angels, her happiness a beacon of light and pure love to all.

for springtime bookings, which will translate to higher numbers of restaurant patrons.”

His local friends are excited to be able to dine out and socialize in small groups at their favorite spots. “It will be wonderful to see smiling faces again,” he said.

The road to recovery

At Nepenthe Restaurant in Big Sur, general manager Kirk Gafill is thrilled to welcome back indoor diners. “It’s terrific,” Gafill told The Pine Cone. “As much as anything, it’s a huge shot of morale. We’re well on our way to a robust recovery and getting back to the way things can be and should be. It’s really a big milestone after all the challenges we’ve had with Covid restrictions.”

Most of his employees weathered the pandemic and its impact on the economy. “We were able to hold onto about 90 percent of our staff,” Gafill said. “We were fortunate to get a Paycheck Protection Program loan in 2020, which ensured the financial stability of our employees when we were forced to close.”

So far, about 25 percent of his staff has been vaccinated, and he praised the Big Sur Health Center for its efforts to give out Covid shots.

With business getting busy down the coast, Nepenthe is hiring, along with others.

“We’re shorthanded,” Gafill said. “It’s my understanding that there are a number of businesses that are hiring.”

Gafill said he’s “very optimistic” about the future.

“We’ve been supported tremendously by our local clientele, and it’s been a big help to have our staff hang in there with us,” he said.

At the Post Ranch Inn, where only hotel guests can dine, the restaurant has gone to great lengths to provide a safe environment for those who prefer to eat inside.

Besides consulting with medical and environmental experts, the restaurant installed a “medical-grade” ventilation system that refreshes the air six times a day and placed air purifiers on each table and throughout the dining area. An air-quality monitoring system assures that dining indoors offers a “comparable level of risk to that of dining outdoors,” and allows staff to “adjust and optimize air quality as needed,” according to Post Ranch management. Tables are separated by plexiglass or steel partitions and placed 6 feet apart.

Inside at the inn

At the Big Sur River Inn, where most people eat outside, indoor dining is back for those seeking a little more warmth, especially after dark.

General manager Rick Aldinger said he’s happy the River Inn can provide guests with another option. For now, there are eight tables in the dining room, which also has a fireplace. “Without a doubt, it’s a step in the right direction,” said Aldinger, who noted that between 70 and 80 percent of his staff is now vaccinated.

During the pandemic, most of the restaurant’s business has been at lunch, but indoor dining makes it possible to extend hours and serve more breakfasts and dinners.

While the River Inn has enough staff for now, Aldinger expects that to change as tourist traffic picks up. “Staffing is going to be a challenge,” he suggested.

In Carmel Valley, three dozen diners can now sit inside Lucia Restaurant + Bar at Bernardus Lodge. Outdoor dining already accommodates more than a hundred people.

Publicist Koleen Hamblin said diners appreciate having more choices. “It’s so much easier to have the option of warm, cozy seating,” she said. To celebrate the reopening of indoor dining, Lucia will unveil a special two-month menu from chef Cal Stamenov with an emphasis on seafood, according to Hamblin.

She also said the restaurant has been fortunate to retain most of its staff.

Still short seated

Monarch Pub & Restaurant owner Paul Whitecross told The Pine Cone he reopened for indoor dining Wednesday. The Pacific Grove pub also has outdoor seats on its patio and in the parking lot.

“Yesterday was St. Patrick’s Day, so we were pretty busy all day,” he said. “We only had three tables inside, and they were full. St. Patrick’s Day is the biggest day of the year for us.”

More days and nights of indoor dining will give him a better idea of how business is really going, he said.

The pub’s employees are getting vaccinated as appointments are available, and Whitecross said he is set to get his first shot Friday.

Lisa Weiman, owner of Peppers Mexicali Café, also in P.G., said she reopened for indoor dining Wednesday night.

“We used to have 20 tables indoors and 15 bar seats” before the coronavirus pandemic, she said. “Now we have only five tables inside and 10 tables outside. So we are still short a lot of seats.”

She said about half of her employees have been fully vaccinated or had their first shot.

“I’m actually driving to work from Salinas because I just went and got my first vaccination of Moderna this morning,” Weiman said Thursday.

Pebble Beach Company CEO Bill Perocchi told The Pine Cone that most of its indoor restaurants, including

The Bench and Roy’s, opened Wednesday and Thursday. Indoor dining at The Tap Room and Sticks will resume when the county moves from the Red to the Orange Tier, which allows for 50 percent capacity.

“Reaction has been extremely positive from all constituents,” he said. “Most importantly, it gives people more options. Our indoor restaurants have been closed since July, and guests and local residents are thrilled to get back to their favorite dining spots. Our advanced reservations, especially for weekends, have been very strong.”

Some people will continue to dine outdoors, but there are others who prefer indoor dining, Perocchi added, and with the safety protocols in place, they feel comfortable eating inside the resort’s restaurants.

Many, if not most, Pebble Beach Company food service workers have been vaccinated, he said.

At the Correctional Training Facility in Soledad, more than 62 percent of inmates have tested positive for the virus. Though the prison just off Highway 101 isn't quite in herd immunity territory, it's on its way.

Of the institution's 4,300 prisoners, 2,717 of them have had been infected with the virus and 18 have died. There have been no new infections at the prison in the past 14 days, and none of the inmates currently have the virus. In the past two weeks, 71 percent of its population has been tested for the virus, the CDCR said.

Employees at the Soledad prison have also been hit hard, with 354 testing positive for the virus. Nine workers currently have Covid-19 and five cases have occurred in the last 14 days. Two employees died from the virus in January.

At nearby Salinas Valley State Prison, also in Soledad, there have been far fewer inmate infections. As of Wednesday, 678 inmates, or about 22 percent of its 3,000 population, have tested positive for coronavirus. There have been four deaths and only 1 case has been reported in the past 14 days.

Staff at Salinas Valley have accounted for 598 infections and 28 have the virus now, while five of them tested positive in the past 14 days. A staff member died from Covid-19 in January.

More than 49,000 state prison inmates and 15,000 employees have been infected with coronavirus, according to the CDCR.

Vaccination effort

The CDCR, and its healthcare division, Correctional Health Care Services, began vaccinating inmates and staff of the state's nearly three dozen institutions in late December.

As of March 16, 69,606 people have received first-round vaccines in state prisons, including 43,437 prisoners and 26,169 employees, CDCR, spokesman John Hill told The Pine Cone this week.

"With our Covid-positive numbers trending in the right direction — with 39 cases across the state's 35 prisons as of today — we are definitely on the right path," Hill said.

State prison inmates who show signs of coronavirus infection or who test positive are immediately put into special housing to isolate them from the general population, and those who may have been exposed to the virus are also quarantined.

Prisoners transferring to institutions are quarantined for 14 days before incarcerated with the general population, and they are tested again before they're released from isolation, according to the CDCR.

To prevent outsiders from infecting prisoners and employees, the CDCR in March 2020 ceased in-person visitations, and in December of that year began offering video visitations.

rent year, which ends June 30, anticipated just $18,780,225 in revenues and $19,805,419 in expenses, to end with a deficit of more than $1 million. The plan included eliminating some 20 jobs, and police officers and the administration's executive team taking voluntary pay cuts roughly totaling $165,000.

Revenues are being boosted by an unexpected $600,000 more in property taxes — which are expected to total more than $7.4 million this year, close to $1 million higher than in 2018-2019 — $612,675 more in sales tax than budgeted, and more than $1.5 million in hotel taxes than expected.

Some council members jumped on the opportunity to spend at least part of the unexpected bounty.

Councilman Jeff Baron said that while “saving money with a purpose is good,” at least some of surplus should be spent now. “We should put that money to work for the people who live here and not squirrel it away in a bank account,” he said.

Councilwoman Carrie Theis suggested some of the funds could be used to repay the workers who put off the raises that were supposed to kick in last July 1 and took cuts to help shore up the budget.

“That is a lot of money that can accomplish a lot of wonderful things for our village, both for our residents and for sprucing up our downtown and making our village safer,” said councilwoman Karen Ferlito. “This is a great problem to have.” She said she'd like to “open up the purse strings in a responsible way.”

“We all hunkered down and made sacrifices over this past year,” she said.

Councilman Bobby Richards said he is proud of the team that helped the city come through such dark months with a strong financial position. “We need to be judicious with the taxpayers' money,” he said. “I just hope we can go through this project list with a very discerning eye.”

None of them suggested using the extra to pay down the looming retirement debt now estimated around $25 million.

Long list

Also at Tuesday's meeting, public works director Bob Harary presented his wish list of several million dollars' worth of capital projects, including three “urgent” items he said should be funded next month: $123,000 for an emergency fire pump at Sunset Center, replacement of the broken water filtration system at the public works yard for $17,000, and $20,000 for a greenhouse gas emissions study, which was requested by the climate change committee.

While the 2021-2022 budget is expected to include a little more than $829,000 for capital projects, Harary compiled a list of close to $1.2 million in items so the council could choose.

“All of these projects are warranted and needed,” he said.

More than $571,000 is needed for road paving, as well as $100,000 for design work for drainage system repairs, hazmat testing and remediation and repair of windows at Sunset Center, a $50,000 renovation of the dispatch area at the police department, a new ambulance and two new police cars, a new antenna for the police department for $200,000 and 22 new radios at $8,200 each, sidewalk repairs, stream work in Mission Trail park, ADA upgrades, a backup generator for the Park Branch library, and $10,000 for “Covid reopening modifications” in city buildings. Some of the work will use county and state tax dollars, too.

A half-dozen more “special projects,” like putting split-rail fencing in the Ocean Avenue medians and installing “wayfinding sigs,” involve donated money and tax dollars from other sources.

Harary then described another 13 projects that could be funded anytime in the next five years, if the council desires, like the $1.4 million renovation of the police department, a $60,000 backup generator to keep the city's computer servers going, the San Carlos Street medians and bike route, and $150,000 for a sea level rise study. They totaled $2.26 million.

And, under “extra bonus projects” in his presentation were a $175,000 street sweeper, $100,000 to renovate Vista Lobos, $50,000 for a “library master plan,” $25,000 for a new AED on the ambulance, and $20,000 for a “forestry management plan.”

The majority of the council was OK with the three “urgent” projects and the 13 Harary proposed for the next fiscal year, with needed additional funding coming from this year's surplus. Richards questioned the need for a greenhouse gas study and a sea level rise study when those have already been done by other local agencies, including the Association of Monterey Bay Area Governments and the Carmel Area Wastewater District.

Ferlito said she would like to fund “some of those sexier projects on the list,” like beautification efforts, and Theis suggested rehiring some of the laid off employees.

No firm decisions were made, since the meeting is the first of several on the budget.

Rat Creek work crew juggles dirt and rain

PINE CONE STAFF REPORT

TO FIX Highway 1 at Rat Creek in Big Sur — where a 150-foot section of pavement collapsed after heavy rain Jan. 28 — Caltrans must first keep the site dry during the final week of the rainy season. Light rain fell Thursday, but the forecast for the next week is clear.

“Crews have developed a drainage plan for the site to divert rainwater coming down the canyon to minimize impacts on the work below,” the state road agency reported this week. “A temporary pipe has been connected to the existing buried culvert which, though damaged by the event, will be able to pass rainwater.”

Besides keeping the site dry, work crews have focused on clearing mud, rock and debris. The next step involves bringing in fill from outside the area, and that work began this week.

“The last of the debris flow material has been removed from the canyon. An estimated 70,000 cubic yards of trees, rocks and sediment have been taken off site,” the report said. Work continues seven days a week during daylight hours and is expected to be completed by summer.

This fellow has used up more lives than an entire herd of cats

THE NOTION that a cat has nine lives is a myth. However, Steve Gann, a real guy, has survived at least six life-threatening medical conditions, two emergency landings, perilous moments on the high seas, and gunfire and artillery in two war zones.

“Funny enough, I’m not really an adventurous type of person,” said Gann, a retired photojournalist who, at 80, is the oldest member of The Usual Suspects Single-Handed Sailing Society, a Monterey Peninsula-based group that requires its mariners (the youngest is in his mid-40s) to sail solo in 40-foot vessels.

“Mine is a Cal-40, one of the iconic sailing vessels you’re going to find. It’s a muscle boat, meaning it’s very physical to sail,” he said. “And sailing isn’t like flying a plane, where you have a checklist in front of you. You keep everything you need to do in your head, and God help you if you don’t get them right. We’re by ourselves out there, and the trouble we get into is horrendous. If there’s a problem, you have to figure it out yourself.”

Gann has been dealing with life-or-death moments from the day he came into this world as a premature, Caesarean-birth twin — his sister, Polly Wing, lives in Houston — and his life story might have been worthy of one of his famous father’s adventure novels.

Ernest K. Gann wrote “The High and the Mighty,” “Fate is the Hunter,” “Island in the Sky” and “Soldier of Fortune,” all of which became Hollywood movies, starring the likes of John Wayne, Jane Russell, Glenn Ford, Susan Hayward and Clark Gable. The elder Gann also was a pilot, an artist, a conservationist and a high-seas sailor — a busy lifestyle that limited any meaningful relationship with his children.

“He wasn’t around a lot,” his son said.

A devoted mother

By contrast, Gann couldn’t have been closer to his mother, Eleanor, who spent much of her time at his bedside during his first 15 years — a remarkable tale in itself.

Eighteen months after Gann’s birth, his appendix burst, nearly killing him in his crib. Then things got a lot worse.

“My mother came to my crib and saw that my incision had opened up, and my guts were lying out in front of me,” he said. “This was 1942, right in the middle of the war, so she spent every day in the hospital after they stitched me back up, because there weren’t enough nurses to look after me.”

At 9, he developed a bilateral hernia, which doctors treated with “metal clamps, instead of stitches, because I had that nasty habit of opening up after surgeries,” Gann said.

Later that same year, he fell out of a tree, sustaining a broken arm, a severe concussion, and internal injuries, which kept him out of school, forcing him to repeat third grade.

At 12, Gann developed a bowel obstruction when his intestines became entangled with scar tissue from his appendix surgery. “You can die from that, and it’s also extraordinarily painful,” he said.

And as a 16-year-old at Carmel High, he developed spinal meningitis, another life-threatening condition, which prevented him from playing on the football team.

Remarkably, Gann managed to live large through his teenage years, crewing for his father on three summertime ocean voyages — two on the Atlantic, one on the Pacific — when he was 14, 15 and 17 years old.

“I sailed with my father a lot, but as a crewmember your status is low. And if you're also the captain's son, you're treated tougher than the other crewmen," he said. "I got every crap job there was, but I'm not complaining — it was a good, hard way to grow up."

Weathering the storm

One routine task was to climb the towering masts to adjust the rigging and heavy sails — a perilous job in placid seas. Gann recalls one trip aboard the Albatros (which sank in 1961, a catastrophe memorialized in the movie, "White Squall") when he went aloft during a severe storm.

"We had no life jackets, no harnesses, and you're hanging onto masts that are oscillating. One false move and you're dead," he said. "I remember looking down and seeing nothing but white foam, because the boat was covered with waves. If I had made a mistake that day, I wouldn't be here."

Gann survived to play linebacker at Carmel High as a junior and senior. He learned to fly when he was 16 and went to the University of Oklahoma, one of only two public universities that offered flight training. At least, until the Federal Aviation Administration learned of his bout with spinal meningitis (which can have long-term neurological aftereffects) and ruled he wasn't mentally capable of flying an aircraft.

He tried to enter Officer Candidate School with the Marine Corps but was rejected because of his bowel-obstruction surgeries as a 12-year-old.

"The ridiculous thing is that I'm totally flatfooted, but got drafted into the Army anyway," he said. "This was August of 1965, the first big grab for bodies for the buildup to the Vietnam War.

"A year earlier, I would have been rejected for any number of reasons, flat feet among them."

Gann fulfilled his military duty at the Special Warfare Center at Fort Bragg, N.C., was discharged in August 1967, and went to the Soviet Union three months later as a credentialed photojournalist to cover the 50th anniversary of the Russian Revolution.

A Soviet soldier confiscated his passport upon his arrival — a frightening incident that eventually was rectified. He also became seriously ill with kidney stones during his stay.

"The embassy doctor gave me morphine syringes for the pain, and I actually had one in my pocket when I left," he said. "If they had found that, I would have been in huge trouble."

His return flight made an emergency landing in Frankfurt, Germany, to deal with an engine that was spewing oil — the second time he'd been in danger of a plane crash.

"The first time was when I was 17, flying from London to L.A.," he said. He was in a four-engine Lockheed passenger plane, and the shaft of the one of the propellers broke.

The plane limped along over Canada, then Montana, where an engine caught fire, then broke loose.

"We banked at the time, otherwise that engine would have torn through the fuselage," Gann said. "It was pitch-black outside and I remember seeing the prairie catch fire."

The plane crash-landed on an abandoned airstrip in Cut Bank, Mont. As Gann pulled the emergency hatch, a flight attendant shoved an infant into his arms.

"I got off and started running, which seemed like a great idea since flames were shooting out of the opposite side and sprinted right into a barbed-wire fence. That's the last thing I remember," he said.

He has no recollection of what happened to the baby, but no deaths or serious injuries were reported in newspaper accounts of the crash.

War zone photojournalism

Gann spent 1968 in Vietnam working as a photojournalist, leaping from planes with cameras draped over his reserve chute, going on patrol, jumping onto helicopters, shooting pictures throughout the combat zone.

In 1969, he traveled to Israel, working as a laborer and moonlighting as a photojournalist near the Golan Heights, avoiding artillery shells and rockets.

Gann became a staff photographer at the Monterey Peninsula Herald in 1970. He said his most memorable assignments included an anti-war protest that attracted 250,000 people to San Francisco, and multiple years covering the Crosby Clambake at Pebble Beach.

"I walked the fairways with Bing Crosby, Bob Hope, Phil Harris, and the rest of those guys. We'd chat and have a nice time," he said. "After it became the AT&T, and the security got tighter, it was less enjoyable."

In 1976, Gann was racing his Hobie Cat on Lake Lopez in Arroyo Grande when he met Mary Morris, an emergency room nurse in Watsonville. They dated for 21 years, until 1997, when they were married.

"Mary is the other reason why I'm still around," he said. "I've had two saviors in my life — my mother and my wife. I've read that the most important decision we'll ever make is who we marry. I agree with that 100 percent."

Brandenburg Concertos turn 300, local celebration goes global

SIX INSTRUMENTAL works that many call the greatest music ever produced, Johan Sebastian Bach's Brandenburg Concertos turn 300 Wednesday, and to mark the milestone, Bob Danziger of Carmel Highlands has organized an online celebration.

Part concert, part documentary, part collage of local imagery, the 90-minute show — titled the Brandenburg 300 Project — will be streamed online at 2 and 7 p.m. To watch it, visit csumb.edu and follow the link on the front page. The event is free.

The program will include selections from the concertos performed by a wide range of musicians, including Black Violin, Wynton Marsalis and the English Chamber Orchestra, Aretha Franklin, the Academy of Ancient Music, Dave Brubeck and many others.

It was produced by Danziger, Jeff Jones, and Doug Mueller. Jones is chair of Music & Performing Arts at Cal State Monterey Bay, while Mueller is technical director for the Carmel Bach Festival.

'Treasured' everywhere

Danziger said as far as he can tell, the celebration is the only one of its kind that's happening anywhere. He said the Bach Museum in Leipzig, Germany, has asked for a copy of the program for its archives, which he called "thrilling beyond words."

A filmmaker, writer, musician and composer, Danziger said the Brandenburg Concertos are treasured around the globe, including here.

"They were played for 21 years straight at the Bach Festival," Danziger told The Pine Cone. "They are the most played piece of classical music in Monterey County — they've been played here 275 times since the 1930s. One concerto was performed 160 times at the Bach Festival alone. The next closest thing is a Beethoven piece at 70."

Youngster wins top prize in statewide art and poetry contest

A FIRST grader who lives downtown and is homeschooled, 6-year-old Liberty Kolsch wrote the winning poem for her age group in this year's California Coastal Commission's annual statewide Art and Poetry contest.

Titled "Me by the Sea," the poem describes a visit to the seashore by its author.

Kolsch's mother, Ishbel, told The Pine Cone the contest helped take her kids' minds off the pandemic, and they enjoyed seeing and reading what other kids came up with.

"It was a happy distraction for our children during this challenging time with Covid," Kolsch's mother, Ishbel, told The Pine Cone. "As a family, we appreciated viewing the coastal-themed art and poetry of children who had participated from all over California."

Kolsch's mom said her daughter received a $100 gift certificate to spend at a "brick and mortar" bookshop, while the student's teacher took home a $50 gift certificate for educational supplies.

The poem, meanwhile, will be published in a journal by Chapman University.

A whale of a painting

Era Glasby, a kindergartener in Pacific Grove, received an honorable mention in the art category for the striking painting, "Sunset Whale Tail." The artist created it after seeing a whale tail for the first time.

The contest is open to all kids through the 12th grade, and participants are encouraged "to explore coastal themes and present them creatively." The coastal commission hopes to increase environmental awareness "by encouraging youth to reflect on the beauty and spirit of California's beaches and ocean." "We hope to inspire a greater sense of stewardship for these natural places," the state land use watchdog agency states on its website.

Since 1998, the coastal commission also presents a yearly photography contest

More hours, more takeout space, more music and more fun

THE PLANNING commission last week voted to let one restaurant stay open later and another to expand into a vacant storefront next door. Café Luna in the Carmel Plaza can remain open until 9 p.m. — and Pegler wrote in a February email to the planning department. On weekends, they said, “we have experienced an increased number of customers in the late afternoon, peaking around 5:30 to 6 p.m., with requests for dinner. It is clear that people would like to have Café Luna as an option for an inexpensive early dinner, and we would like to provide that.”

They also said having later hours would draw people to Carmel Plaza and therefore “give continued exposure to our neighboring businesses.” Tarone noted that other Plaza restaurants stay open well into the evening: Alvarado Street Brewery operates until 10 p.m. on weeknights and until midnight on weekends, Flying Fish Grill is open until 10 p.m., Patisserie Boissiere is open until 9 p.m., and Rise + Roam serves until 11 p.m. Numerous dining establishments downtown are also open later. Therefore, she suggested, no harm could come from giving Café Luna similar privileges.

The other Carmel Plaza businesses, meanwhile, generally close by 6 p.m. most days, and at 5 p.m. on Sundays.

Tarone told the commission letting Café Luna stay open later would probably not be disruptive in any way. “Additionally, the proposed 9 p.m. closing time is modest in comparison to the 10 to 11 p.m. average closing hours for other restaurants,” she said. No neighboring business owners or nearby residents expressed concern about it, either. Planning commissioners agreed with her, voting to OK Café Luna’s new hours.

nie Waffle told commissioners Stationaery had been open just under two years when the coronavirus pandemic hit, forcing diners outside.

The couple subsequently proposed taking over an adjacent empty storefront to offer to-go food. It wouldn’t contain any tables, chairs or food prep. “It’s simply some additional space to allow folks who are ordering food either online or over the phone to pick up their food and not have to interact with anyone working in the main restaurant,” Waffle said. “So, it does provide some social distancing between those two functions of the restaurant.”

A downtown resident briefly stated she supports the proposal and that Stationaery “does a great job.” No one else — not even the Carnazzos — called in to the meeting to comment.

They did send a simple explanation of how operations would work in the vacant space, though. Guests would order over the phone or online, staff would prepare the food in the kitchen and take it to the new take-away window, and customers would pick it up there, “walking straight to the separate space, minimizing unnecessary interaction with extra staff members or seated guests,” and therefore not standing in line or congregating where people are dining at outdoor tables.

“Guest departs premises with delicious food,” they concluded. “Stationaery stays in business!”

Commissioner Chris Bolton took no issue with the proposal. “I think it’s a very good idea,” he said. “Anything that can help keep businesses in operation and increase social distancing — while we still have to do that — is really welcome.”

Commissioner Gail Lehman said she was “fine with it if it makes their life a little rather than 6 — and Stationaery on San Carlos between Fifth and Sixth can add 250 square feet of space to be used for distributing takeout orders.

At their March 10 meeting, commissioners did not discuss Café Luna’s application before approving it, and only briefly reviewed Stationaery’s.

According to assistant planner Catherine Tarone, Luna Wang and Philip Pegler applied in January to extend the hours at their Carmel Plaza restaurant, which was formerly the Carmel Coffee & Cocoa Bar, so they can be open from 7 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily. The café serves numerous coffee and espresso drinks, along with breakfast and lunch dishes, salads and ramen bowls.

“Increasingly, we are receiving requests from customers to stay open later, since our restaurant’s menu is diverse and it’s affordable, especially for larger groups,” Wang

Indoor dining is back, but for those who prefer to enjoy their meals al fresco, Grasing’s rooftop deck (left) and the elegant tent at the Sardine Factory (below) are good options. Grasing’s will be hosting a wine dinner Sunday, and the Sardine Factory offers an early-bird menu.

■ New pandemic ABC rules

Following the governor’s rejigging of his “Blueprint for a Safer Economy” last week, the state department of Alcoholic Beverage Control announced new rules that took effect March 13 for wineries, breweries, distilleries and bars.

Wineries, breweries and distilleries that don’t serve food can now reopen outdoors in the Purple and Red tiers, as long as customers have reservations, are seated at a table, and stay no longer than 90 minutes. Onsite consumption must stop at 8 p.m.

In the Orange Tier, they can serve indoors up to 25 percent of maximum capacity or 100 people, whichever is fewer, and under Yellow, that capacity can increase to 50 percent.

The Yellow Tier, which requires under one daily case per 100,000 people and a test positivity rate of 2 percent or lower, is the least restrictive tier, so presumably, breweries, wineries and distilleries won’t be able to return to full capacity indoors until coronavirus is eradicated, unless the state revises the tiers again.

Bars that don’t serve food still can’t reopen indoors or outside under the Purple and Red tiers, but they can start serving outdoors in the Orange tier, according to the state. In the Yellow tier, they can serve up to 25 percent of capacity or 100 people inside, whichever is fewer.

■ Money Band and food trucks

The Money Band Duo will liven up this week’s Food Truck Friday at the Monterey Fairgrounds March 19 from 5 to 7 p.m. Every Friday from 4 to 7 p.m., food trucks gather at the fairgrounds to sell a wide range of goodies to go, and an outdoor dining area has been set up for those who’d like to enjoy their purchases onsite instead of jumping back in their cars and leaving. This week, the duo of guitarist/singer Steve Moseley and lead singer Zoe Alexander will entertain them with pop, rock, country and reggae covers. Guests should enter through Gate 5.

For information, contact the Monterey County Event Center at (831) 372-5863 or events@montereycountyfair.com.

■ What’s on the menu

Chef and restaurant owner Kurt Grasing and wine director Eric Ewers this week announced the menu for their Mail Road prix fixe wine dinner March 21. Reservations are available between 5 and 7:30 p.m. for up to four guests per group, and the cost is $135 per person, including tax and tip.

The first course will be foie gras torchon with cranberry jam on grilled bread, served with a bubbly aptly named The Sparkler and made from a small block of chardonnay in the winery’s Mt. Carmel Vineyard in the Santa Rita Hills near Santa Barbara. Next, black cod with fried polenta cake and braised greens will be paired with a side-by-side tasting of 2015 and 2017 chardonnays, also from Mt. Carmel Vineyard.

The third course of grilled lamb chops and spiced sweet potato purée will feature a side-by-side comparison of two 2015 pinots, both from the Mt. Carmel Vineyard, but one made from grapes grown in three specific blocks. The fourth and final course will be Toma truffle cheese with candied pecan crumble, served with 2014 pinot noir.

Reserve at form.jotform.com/210526734924153, and for more information about Grasing’s, which is located at Sixth and Mission, go to grasings.com.

■ Eduardo does demo

Eduardo Coronel, executive chef of the Rio Grill at the Crossroads, will do a live cooking demonstration via Zoom for Everyone’s Harvest Certified Farmers Markets March 30 at 4 p.m.

He plans to prepare horseradish-crusted red rainbow trout with Baker’s Bacon, sweet potato hash and roasted poblano pesto.

Go to zoom.us, click “join a meeting,” and enter ID 947 0205 0418 and passcode 732546. For more information about Everyone’s Harvest, which hosts farmers markets in Pacific Grove, Marina, Salinas and elsewhere, go to everyone’sharvest.org or call (831) 384-6961.

■ Sardine Factory’s fancy tent

The Sardine Factory restaurant’s outdoor dining tent, complete with chandeliers, is back on the Wave Street property just off Cannery Row. The two 20-by-40-foot tents are carpeted and seat approximately 138 guests, with tables available from 4:30 to 9:30 p.m. nightly.

A two-course early-evening menu is offered from 4:30 to 6 p.m., and a three-course prix fixe can be ordered for takeout. All menus can be found at sardinefactory.com. Call (831) 373-3775 for more information or reservations.

MUSIC

The Carmel Highlands man said another local link to the concertos was the late Mickey Kapp of Pacific Grove, who was best known for assembling mixed music tapes for astronauts. Kapp played a key role in assembling the music for the Golden Records, which were two phonograph records carried into space in 1977 by the Voyager spacecraft, where they presumably will survive the earth's demise in 4 or 5 billion years.

The Brandenburg Concertos, performed by the Munich Bach Orchestra, are the first music on the first record.

Danziger called the concertos not only "the most significant pieces of music ever written," but a significant part of Monterey County's cultural history.

"As J.S. Bach was composing the Brandenburg Concertos, he experienced the full range of human emotion — from contentment to misery to the heights of new love to a new normal," he added. "Like almost all great artists, all of that is on the page and expressed in the music."

The commencement speaker at Cal State Monterey Bay in 2013, Danziger received an Honorary Doctorate of Fine Arts from the university in 2011. CSUMB's RND Amphitheater is named for him.

Art museum puts everything online

The pandemic still has it closed, but that isn't stopping the Monterey Museum of Art from letting the public enjoy its entire collection, which is now displayed online for the first time.

"It's been nearly a year since the museum closed," the museum announced last week. "While we miss seeing our community and sharing our art with you in person, it has given us a chance to develop our 'digital wing' and we're excited to announce that our entire collection is now available to browse online." To see the collection, visit montereyart.org/embark.

Student art show at Cherry

Now on display on the Carl Cherry Center for the Arts' website is its annual Thinking Out Loud exhibit, which showcases the talents of student-artists from throughout Monterey County.

The show includes painting, drawing, ink-relief sculpture and collage — all part of a regional art competition that encourages youngsters to find creative inspiration in their lives.

The display, which continues through April 9, is juried, and cash prizes will be awarded to three students. For more details, visit carlcherrycenter.org.

For the 2009 Padres, months of winning led to a glorious finale

THE 2009 Carmel High football roster was star-spangled with nine first-team all-league selections, seven all-county picks, four first-team all-state choices and one second-teamer.

But as they prepared to defend their perfect 11-0 record

Peninsula Sports

By DENNIS TAYLOR

in the school's first Central Coast Section championship game, the Padres were very much the sum of their parts.

An offense that would finish with 637 points, averaging 454.8 yards per game, will long be remembered for sophomore quarterback Devin Pearson (2,442 yards passing, 31 touchdowns, 3 interceptions — none after the third week of the season) and senior running back Dylan Hopkins (1,539 yards rushing, 26 TDs).

Small, smart, agile

All of that was made possible by a small-but-tenacious offensive line — tackles Stu Harney (215 pounds) and Gasper Aliotti (210), guards Freddy Silva (150) and Brenden Wilson (195), and center Alex "Fig" Newton (175).

"All of our offensive success started with the line," said running back Andrew Keyser, who scored 10 touchdowns despite battling injuries for part of the season. "As a running back, you have a special appreciation for the O line, because you literally can't do anything without them."

They were smart, agile and technically sound, thanks in no small measure to head coach Golden Anderson's dad, offensive line coach Jim Anderson (assisted by Frank Ringer), who played at Monterey High and Monterey Peninsula College, and never tasted defeat until midway through his second season of junior college football.

Pearson completed an astonishing 73 percent of his passes, with no favorite target, spreading the wealth to Mike Manas (43 catches, 542 yards, 6 TDs), Cody Johnston (35-553, 11 TDs), Garret Woodward (28-541, 9 TDs), and Martin Enriquez (14-189, 1 TD) — all wide receivers coached by Rob Sanford. And Hopkins, the all-state running back (18 receptions, 427 yards, 4 TDs), was yet another threat.

Carmel's defensive line coach, Mike Herro, was an unsung secret weapon. A Monterey County public defender, Herro knew how to deliver a closing argument — something he did every weekend, just before the Padres took the field.

Said Johnston, "His pregame talks were absolutely chilling, and sometimes would even have players in tears — not out of sadness, but with determination and excitement."

"Imagine Tony Robbins, but louder and more aggressive," Manas added.

The defensive linemen — Keenan Lucero, Doug DeGeorge, Jimmy Osornio, Jordan Koucky and Sam Koontz — combined for 272 tackles, including 18 sacks, and helped limit opposing rushers to 254 yards per game.

"Keenan embodied what our program is all about — undersized, hard-working, detail-oriented and unselfish, all while having a lot of fun," Anderson said of the 2009 MTAL Lineman of the Year, who died Aug. 13, 2011, in an automobile accident. "We wear a 'KL' sticker on our helmets to remember him, and we also named our team Lineman of the Year award after him."

Linebackers, coached by Devin Meheen, included Andrew Franks, Nino Miguel, Dominic Rivera, Jesse Reimer and Ryan Nottenkamper. Fast, strong and ferocious, they accounted for 339 tackles.

"Dom was the guy who made everybody laugh," Johnston said. "Don't call him a clown, though."

The secondary, coached by Keith Garner, included all-leaguer Dahan Kim, Manas, Josh Coronado, Jacob Shyvers, and Johnston, who got four of the unit's seven interceptions and tied for the team lead in tackles (99).

'Air Jesus'

Meheen — dubbed "Air Jesus" (a spin on "Air Jordan") because he wore leather sandals to practice — coordinated a defense that ranked second to San Benito in the four-county area for fewest points allowed (13.5 per game).

Special teams were coached by Tony Melendrez, who, according to Manas, "embodied what it meant to be accidentally hilarious," and insisted on hustle. Keyser averaged 47 yards per kickoff return (including an 89 yarder), 18 per punt return. Hopkins averaged 33 per kickoff (longest: 93 yards). Franks kicked 68 extra points and three field goals.

Then there was Golden Anderson, who quarterbacked the Padres in 1996, played QB and wide receiver at the University of Redlands before an injury ended his career, and began teaching and assisting head football coach terey Peninsula Airport District's five directors Wednesday a presentation outlining why it believes including "Carmel" in the name would benefit the airport and the city.

"A name change will have a positive impact on the airport in terms of brand awareness, exposure, new routes, healthy load factors, and ultimately increased airport profitability," the group said.

Visit Carmel pointed to Carmel-by-the-Sea's reputation as an "internationally recognized destination," and said the change would "broaden the bullseye in identifying the region."

"Carmel is a motivator to visit the destination, and a well-recognized brand. At the same time, we know that people from out of the area don't make the connection that Monterey, Pebble Beach and Carmel are in the same location."

The airport was known as the Monterey Peninsula Airport until September 2011, when board members changed the name.

'Well received'

Yet a new name change, Visit Carmel said, would also help the airport compete against those in Santa Barbara and San Luis Obispo, and position "us better for more air service, and for a higher rated traveler who stays longer and spends more — good for the whole community."

The presentation included a statement from Monterey Bay Aquarium chief marketing officer Mimi Hahn, who said she doesn't "see a downside" to the proposal.

"Potential fly-in visitors having a better understanding that Carmel is part of the destination would be beneficial for our whole tourism community," Hahn said.

Visit Carmel quotes Alaska Airlines spokesman Franco Finn as saying the airline — which offers flights from Monterey — also supports the moniker change, "as it will add to the allure and better identify the region."

Visit Carmel told the airport district board that CarmelCalifornia.com — its website — is the "top referring," non-paid website into montereyairport.com, and it reminded the board of the airport campaigns on its site.

"Visit Carmel takes the initiative by not only including the airport as a permanent part of our website, but encouraging it amongst our hotels and other stakeholders so it is highly amplified throughout Carmel," the group told the airport board.

Visit Carmel's board of directors includes Carmel city administrator Chip Rerig, restaurateur Rich Pepe and councilwoman Carrie Theis.

Airport executive director Michael La Pier said the presentation was "well done" and "well received," and airport board directors asked "a good number of thoughtful questions." He said he appreciated the strong partnership between the group and Carmel-by-the-Sea.

"Regardless of what, if any, decision is made, I look forward to continuing and growing that relationship," La Pier told The Pine Cone.

A journey down bad memory lane

NOBODY KNOWS where the coronavirus will go from here. The virus certainly isn't gone and may never be. We still don't really know why and how it spreads, and we don't understand what the impact of some of the variants we keep hearing about will be.

Still, with vaccination rates increasing steadily, there is reason to be encouraged. The county health department says only 141 active cases of coronavirus infection are known to exist in the county right now; in quite a few of the county's zip codes, that number is probably in the single digits, or zero. And even with indoor dining back in business and tourist attractions like the Monterey Bay Aquarium getting ready to reopen, very few people are ready to give up on social distancing or quit wearing masks when they're out in public. You might say that vigilant optimism rules the day.

Anyone who does otherwise because they think they know what the future holds is just being foolish, and if you want to bring such a person back to earth, just have them take a quick look at the archive of Pine Cones and news bulletins on our website. Those documents — now part of Monterey County's history — tell a story that's poignant and a reminder of how uncertain this voyage through the coronavirus pandemic has been.

For starters, it's interesting to see the headlines in the weeks just before the epidemic arrived. "Council may put limits on home mail delivery," was the top story in our March 6, 2020, front page. "Voters approve increased sales tax," "Restaurant wizard declares bankruptcy," "Campground coming to Fort Ord," "Cal Am agrees to desal permit delay" and "ADA claims filed by man who can't stop eating" all made the front page a year ago — headlines that seem quaint and even naive considering the disaster that was about to hit.

Suddenly, on March 13, a sense of urgency about the virus took over our news coverage as awareness of its potential impact on life in this county went from "tepid to extreme in a matter of days," we reported. Cruise ship passengers were to be quarantined at Asilomar, CHOMP was setting up a triage tent to handle the expected surge of coronavirus patients, and fears of the virus brought "cancellations and closings," we said — all before a single coronavirus infection occurred here.

The first two cases were detected March 17, which prompted county health officer Dr. Ed Moreno to issue a "shelter-in-place" order he said would last three weeks. "Temporarily making these drastic changes to our lives and routines may be frustrating, but it is critical to slowing the spread of this virus," we quoted Moreno as saying. "We must weigh the loss of some freedoms we enjoy with the ability to separate healthy people who may not show symptoms from those at risk who may be inadvertently exposed."

Little did anyone know that the shutdown would last — in one form or another — for more than a year. And as the total of virus cases in the county grew to 42 by the end of March, 213 at the end of April, 530 on May 31, and 1,600 at the end of June, we also didn't suspect that six months later, Monterey County would be hit with more than 3,000 new cases every day. Just as surprising is that fact that now cases are back to fewer than 200 a week, and have been since early this month. What caused the shocking spike that started in December, and why has the epidemic declined so rapidly over the last six weeks? No one can say for sure.

In journalism school, they teach you to report the what, where, when, why and how. Our archive is full of the what, where and when of the coronavirus epidemic. But the why and how remain a big mystery.

Letters to the Editor

A skunk and the virus

Dear Editor,

As I walked my dogs in the early morning hours in Carmel Valley on St. Patrick's Day, and I could barely lift my left arm above my head, I found myself reflecting on the fact that a year has gone by since the first morning of the lock downs.

I remembered the morning of March 17, 2020, quite well.

It was a drizzly morning when I woke and let my freshly groomed dogs out into the dark morning yard to do their duty. When I opened the front door to let them back in, all I could smell was the strong odor of skunk.

Yes, both of them had been sprayed in the face.

One of them proceeded upstairs and under our bed where my wife was still asleep, and the other one ran into the dining room and rubbed her face all over the carpet.

I hurriedly gathered them and put them both outside and tried to figure out what move to make next. Standing there in my bathrobe dumbfounded, I went online to find a solution for the skunk odor that was not only on the dogs, but throughout the house. When I went back outside, I felt so sorry for my two dogs, both of their eyes were swollen shut and they were covered from head to toe in mud and grass from trying to rub the skunk odor off.

I got dressed and went to Safeway at mid valley only to discover that the cleaning supply selection was totally wiped out. Yes, it was a calamity morning that I will never forget.

I will also not forget the reason why I couldn't lift my arm above my head as I went for my walk. The day before, I received my second Covid shot. I reflected on the fact that it was the Trump administration that made it possible for me to have that sore left arm due to Operation Warp Speed, which had enabled a vaccine to be made in such a short amount of time.

The Biden administration is trying to make everyone believe that they are here to save us, and next thing you know they're going to try to make us believe that they invented the assembly line.

Dennis Ward, Carmel Valley

Interplanetary travel

Dear Editor,

Jay Murray's letter "Polluting Mars?" (March 5), shows ignorance of the technology needed to go to Mars and other planets further from the sun than Earth.

Nuclear power, from uranium or plutonium, is absolutely necessary to provide power (heat & electricity) for equipment and eventually humans. There are no fossil fuels, tides or winds to generate power on Mars. Solar radiation is much weaker than here, and the dust that accumulates on solar panels eventually renders them useless.

Yes, there is always the possibility of a probe or ship being destroyed during entry into the atmosphere, but that does not mean that radioactive material will be spread over a wide area. The radioactive materials on the probes are inside containers to prevent this from happening.

Three months of Stevenson's life led to decades of restoration

SOON AFTER Robert Louis Stevenson died in 1894, the French Hotel on Huston Street in Monterey became a tourist attraction. Readers who enjoyed books like "Treasure Island" and "The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" also read Stevenson's letters that were published in 1899. Those letters — along with the "Old Pacific Capital" chapter in his book "Across the Plains" — provided romantic descriptions of the three months he lived at the hotel in 1879. At the time, Stevenson was a 29-year-old, sickly visitor from Scotland and virtually unknown except to Fanny Osbourne, the woman he had come to California to wed.

Ne'er-do-wells

Stevenson met Osbourne in Europe a few years earlier. She had gone there for two years to give her children a European education and to get a break from her philandering husband in San Francisco. She returned to California, divorced her husband and married Stevenson in May 1880. The ceremony was in San Francisco, and then the newlyweds, along with her son, Samuel Lloyd, age 12, traveled to Stevenson's homeland. There, although he remained sickly, Stevenson became a very successful writer. In 1888, the family left to sail the South Seas, and even built a home in Samoa in 1890. Stevenson did his final writing from there; some, like "Ebb-Tide," were co-written with his stepson. Stevenson was just 44 when he died, but his works and his life became legendary.

Back in Monterey, where he had lived before the wedding, the old French Hotel had deteriorated. Manuela Girardin, who owned the property and had been recently widowed when Stevenson stayed there, remarried in 1882. Her hotel was now low-end apartments, and she and her new husband, Victor Canet, became absentee landlords to a collection of ne'er-do-wells. The adobe walls began to crumble, but the only "improvement" they made was that about 1900 they added a sign: "R. Stevenson House."

Carriages leaving Hotel Del Monte for 17-Mile Drive tours added Stevenson House as one of the points of interest. But the owners made no effort to clean it up. Police had to visit often to break up fights and investigate local robberies. Manuela died in 1906 and Victor died in 1911. At that time, Stevenson House became jointly owned by the four surviving Girardin children.

Stevenson House remained a ghetto-like rental property, just another of the deteriorating adobes of Monterey. Its back-fence neighbor had been the impressive El Cuartel. It once housed the Mexican soldiers and had served as government offices until 1875 when Monterey lost the county seat to Salinas. That aging building was soon neglected and was finally torn down in 1910.

No regrets

In 1912 a Girardin tenant, Pauline de la Torre, shot and killed Antonio Sanchez, another tenant. The killing, which happened in the doorway of her apartment, was deemed self-defense and she had no regrets. Sanchez had beaten her a few months earlier in a dispute, and this

AN ARTIST WHO JUST WON'T BE STILL

THE ARTISTIC journey continues for Pacific Grove colorist Susan Reith, who felt inspired to begin creating abstract art three years ago, at age 88, after making a career from post-impressionist-style still life paintings.

The brilliant hues that have become a signature of her work remain prominent in the series of paintings — both still life and abstract — that were exhibited in her show, ories is copying "Betty Boop," the American cartoon character created in 1930 by Max Fleischer.

"I was drawing, drawing, drawing all the time — I was always drawing and painting in school," she said. "My younger sister wanted to be an artist because I wanted to be an artist. She always wanted to follow me around, so I made her carry my art bag when I went out to paint. She ended up teaching art in her own private studio to children in kindergarten and grade school."

Sizuko was 12 years old in December 1941, when the Japanese bombed Pearl Harbor, and 16 in August of 1945, when the Americans dropped atomic bombs on Nagasaki — 400 miles from her hometown of Osaka — and Hiroshima, but knew about none of it.

English major

"We didn't have TV, and the radio never told us anything — everything was secret," she said. "The government didn't tell us anything because this was war and they didn't want us to know what was happening. I didn't learn about any of that until later."

Another memory from her youth: A house in her neighborhood was bombed, and the blaze spread to her own home. "We had to build it again," she said, "but everything was smaller."

She was known at her high school as "the girl who paints," encouraged by a "very good art teacher" who accompanied Sizuko and her sister on painting excursions in Osaka, Nara and other nearby locations. She also took art lessons at Mr. Miro's Art School in Okinawa, where she learned about painting in oil.

She enrolled as an art student at Kobe College (a prestigious, private, liberal arts school for women, founded in 1948 by missionaries), but changed her path of study to English. "I changed because I didn't know if I could get a job in art, but English was important because of the war," she explained.

Her first husband, an American GI who was part of the postwar occupation force, married her in Japan and brought her to New Jersey in 1951, when she was 22. With military housing scarce, she lived in a multistory apartment building while her husband was deployed to Germany, but adjusted well.

"People were very nice, and curious to see me and talk to me," she said. "The milkman came inside and had coffee with me, and a neighbor told me never to do that — never invite people inside the house — be-

"Susan Reith: Voyage," which closed Feb. 3 at the Carmel Art Association, where she has been a member since 1985. Images of her work can be found online at carmelart.org, and viewed by appointment at the Carmel Art Association.

"I started getting tired of doing still lifes, and needed to paint something new. Art is always changing," said Reith, whose diverse portfolio includes bright florals, muted nudes, and her newest addition — flamboyantly radiant geometric abstract flashe vinyl paint, which is similar to acrylic gouache. She uses color to playfully tug the viewer's eye in every direction. Her patterns suggest there are surprises waiting to be found.

Inspired by Matisse

"Henri Matisse was my inspiration," she said of the iconic French modern artist, part of the 20th-century Fauvist movement. "His bright colors and simplicity in form took me toward painting colorful floral still lifes."

Reith was born Sizuko Totsu, the second of three children, in Osaka, Japan, where one of her enduring childhood mem-cause I was young and by myself.”

Sizuko and her husband, who had three children together — Louis, Fredrick Faul and Regina Faul-Doyle — moved to Pacific Grove in 1967, when Sizuko worked briefly as a pastel portrait artist in the gift shop at the Highlands Inn, then at a dry cleaning shop in Monterey after the couple was divorced.

In 1971, she married family law attorney Daniel Reith, who was her husband for 39 years, until June of 2010, when he succumbed to prostate cancer after a long struggle. He was 71.

During her second marriage, the painter now known as Susan Reith made several summertime trips to New York City, where she studied at the fabled Art Students League in Manhattan.

“It was wonderful. I met lots of other artists from other countries, and had many good teachers,” she said. “I loved New York, loved the great museums, especially the Metropolitan Museum of Art. It’s a wonderful place.”

Reith also took art classes at Monterey Peninsula College, earning an Associates of Arts degree, and in 1985 she became a member of the prestigious Carmel Art Association.

“They select new members only once a year, and they only take a few,” she said. “I was very happy to be chosen. It’s a hard place to get into.”

As she approaches her 92nd birthday in April, Reith continues to paint almost daily, enjoying her time in the studio. “I feel lucky I can do it,” she said.

that have relatively few calls each day.

“This requires designing and staffing an entire system covering hundreds of square miles for fewer than 10 calls a day, and the finances and mathematics do not work,” he said, and other aspects of the model are “unsafe, fallible and create extreme risk.”

“We genuinely want to remain in Monterey County, but we cannot propose a model that we believe could not be realistically achieved at a reasonable cost to the public who utilize our services,” he said.

After the county health department confirmed it received no bids for a new contract by last Friday’s deadline, the only statement offered was, “We are assessing our options as our goal is to ensure continuity of services.”

Twice failed

Will the county pay a consultant another quarter-million dollars to try to come up with a new plan? In 2017, the board of supervisors signed a multi-year contract with Fitch & Associates to develop the latest ambulance contract requirements.

A 2019 effort netted only one bid, from AMR, which the county rejected for being too expensive. With the second try getting no bids, maybe it’s time for something different, Monterey Fire Chief Gaudenz Panholzer suggested.

“If you fail twice, you really need to reconsider what you’re doing, because clearly, it isn’t working,” he said. “I think we’re at a place where we need to do some out-of-the-box thinking.”

Nothing to lose

During earlier discussion, the county seemed to dismiss input from local fire chiefs and other medical providers, and he encouraged them to change course and sit down with the stakeholders.

“I think there’s a solution for how to provide quality EMS at a reasonable cost in a collaborative way,” he said, and the discussion should include first responders, hospitals, mental health organizations — “all sorts of people who can participate in providing the service and maybe collaboratively can come up with a different model.”

“And it may or may not work,” he said. “But what do we have to lose?”

In the meantime, he’s not worried residents and visitors won’t get an ambulance when they need one. “I have no concern that there won’t be an ambulance provider, because I know that AMR would never walk away or pull out,” he said. “That’s not the way they run their business.”

Esslinger confirmed that’s the case.

“I can’t see a single scenario where AMR would exit Monterey County, regardless of whether we have a contract in place. We would never place the public at risk,” he told The Pine Cone.

“We desperately want to find a way to work out a long-term agreement and continue our partnership with Monterey County. That’s our goal,” he said.

HISTORY

time was coming at her with a knife.

Monterey Mayor Carmel Martin insisted that the Girardins clean up their property and its residents. The Girardins countered the demand by saying the building needed to “pay for itself and that present occupants are the only ones that would live in the place.” If the city pressed for them to make improvements, they’d just tear it down. It was a standoff. The property was offered for sale, but no one wanted to take on the challenge. Luis Girardin was 62 when he bought out his siblings in 1915 and became the sole owner.

San Francisco matrons

Four years later, in April 1919, local contractor Sidney Ruthven purchased the aging structure. A June 16 item in the Monterey Daily Cypress reported, “Workmen have been engaged for some days in painting, bracing and otherwise preserving the old building known as the Robert Louis Stevenson House ... to benefit future generations.” Ruthven soon offered it for rental to artists and it became the base of the Monterey Group of artists that included Armin Hansen, C. S. Price, the Bruton sisters (Margaret, Helen and Esther) and August Gay. Price and Gay boarded there, others rented studio space, and they periodically held art shows in what they called the “Little Gallery.”

New owners Capt. and Mrs. Frederick H. Randall came forward in November 1922. Prior to World War I, they lived at “Hollyhocks,” a large home in Montecito. Randall, a successful attorney, early aviator, and Army reservist was 45 when he was called to service. He led the 308th Aero Squadron in Europe. After the war ended in 1918, he took an interest in the Stevenson House and bought it with intentions to make it their home.

His wife did not agree. The artists remained and Randall soon joined them — alone. Together with publisher James King Steele, Randall formed the Stevenson Club, an international group that claimed many honorary members in the world of literature.

A few years later, two San Francisco matrons long associated with the Monterey area, arranged to buy the Stevenson House through local real estate agent Arthur G. Metz, who initially kept their identity (and their wealth) secret. In April 1927, ownership transferred to Metz and then immediately to Celia Tobin Clark and Edith Van Antwerp. Clark owned one of the coastal mansions on 17 Mile Drive. Van Antwerp and her husband, Wall Street insider William C. Van Antwerp, were founding members of Cypress Point Club, and he was its first president.

Clark and Van Antwerp were clients of Frances Elkins, a creative interior designer who specialized in one-of-a-kind furniture. They leased the ground floor of the Stevenson House to Elkins for her office and showroom. Many of the artists were moved out, but Gay stayed in the upstairs apartment believed to have been Stevenson’s. He used the back stairs to go between his room and a backyard shed he used for wood carving. His skill as a carver and painter made him a valued supplier to Elkins. The Bruton sisters supplied tabletops with unique terrazzo designs to Elkins.

The ladies continued to invest in maintaining the aging adobe and began preparing a plan for its long-term preservation. They had extensive discussions with both state authorities and Col. Roger S. Fitch, president of the Monterey History and Art Association. Fitch also opened discussions with Isobel Osbourne, then in her 80s, who was agreeable to providing family records and heirlooms for a Stevenson museum. In January 1941, the ladies officially offered to donate the Stevenson House to the state.

The only conditions were that the tenants had to be given at least six months to relocate, the state would provide a curator and maintain the property as a museum with no admission fee, and it would install a large fireproof vault for valuable memorabilia.

California State Parks tentatively accepted the offer in April. Governor Earl Warren delayed it, refusing to accept the property with a $12,000 mortgage. The ladies took care of that, and in August the governor agreed. Gay quickly designed and began construction of a new home for himself in Carmel, patterned after the Stevenson House. Before Elkins found another location, the nation entered World War II, and any planned transformation was delayed. Elkins was allowed to stay for “the duration.”

Rekindling interest

In 1947, Elkins moved to a new location on Fisherman’s Wharf and the State of California began the required work, including adding the vault. Fitch resumed discussions with Osbourne and materials were entrusted to the protection of Monterey History and Art until the museum work was completed.

By early 1949, the public was allowed to visit Stevenson House, and on Nov. 13, 1949, the 99th anniversary of Stevenson’s birth, it was officially dedicated as a state-owned landmark. Today, you can only visit its exterior, but hopefully soon it (and everything else) will re-open for public access. In the interim, revisit one of his books. I have his complete works on my Kindle reader.

Craig Johnston at Carmel in 2003.

"He treated us like men, and held us to high standards, both as players and as students," Pearson said. "Whether or not we realized it, Coach taught us so many lessons about life, and how to handle adversity."

All of the aforementioned had the Padres feeling cocksure of themselves with one last challenge ahead — beating Menlo-Atherton (9-3) for the CCS championship on Dec. 5.

"We were extremely confident heading into the game, having already beaten Menlo by 35 points earlier in the year," Manas said. "I don't think anyone doubted we would win."

First-quarter wakeup call

With playoff victories over Greenfield and Sacred Heart Prep under their belts, the Bears showed up at Westmont High Stadium with a very different vision. Quarterback Dan Diekroeger, a future minor-league baseball player, riddled Carmel's defensive secondary with 470 yards passing, completing 30 of 48 throws (four for touchdowns), primarily to Tim Benton (10 catches, 237 yards) and Beau Nichols (12-122).

Diekroeger struck paydirt on the fourth play of the game, a 42-yard touchdown pass to Benton, then kicked the conversion for a 7-0 lead. It was the first time Carmel had trailed all year, but Menlo's celebration was short-lived.

Hopkins caught the kickoff at the 7, bolted up the middle, cut to his right, and streaked 93 yards down the sideline. Nobody laid so much as a hand on him. After an offside penalty, Andrew Keyser was stopped short in an attempt to run for a 2-point conversion, leaving Menlo with a 7-6 edge.

The Bears quickly struck again, this time on third and 18, when Clay Robbins, double-covered, caught a 43-yarder from Diekroeger. The extra-point gave Menlo a 14-6 lead.

"When they scored back-to-back, it startled us. Of all of our games, that one tested us the most," Hopkins conceded. "But we took it all in stride and started scoring ourselves."

Hopkins took the next kickoff to mid-field, then Pearson ran to the Menlo 38 on an option. Five plays and a penalty later, Keyser scored from the 2. Pearson passed for the 2-point conversion to Nottenkamper (his only points of the year) for a 14-14 tie.

Touchdown runs by Hopkins (8 yards to end the first quarter) and Pearson (1 yard to open the second), plus a 31-yard scoring strike from Pearson to Enriquez, helped Carmel to a 35-21 halftime lead.

The second quarter also featured the most memorable defensive play of the year, a bone-crunching hit by Kim, the all-league cornerback and co-captain, on Menlo receiver Clay Robbins, breaking up a third-and-5 pass to stop a drive.

"As soon as (Diekroeger) threw the ball, I knew I was going to make a huge play, and I vividly remember the loud noise from the crowd and the sideline," remembered Kim, a native of South Korea. "It was the biggest hit of my six-year football career, and I'm so glad it happened in my final game."

Pearson hit Woodward with two more touchdown passes in the second half — 8 and 59 yards — and Hopkins ran 18 yards for his third TD of the day, lifting the Padres to the first CCS football crown in school history, 56-35.

Feast worthy of CCS kings

"Lifting that trophy in front of all of my friends and family in my last game was one of the best moments of my life," Manas said. "After the game, the team and our student buses stopped at In-N-Out Burger in Morgan Hill, and I'll never forget the energy and excitement."

Although the 2009 Padres remain the only team in Carmel history to win the CCS crown, the Padres reached the finals with an 11-1 record in 2010, and 12-0 in 2011, losing title games to Sacred Heart Prep and Palma.

Players who were on all three of those varsity rosters were Pearson, Shyvers, Aliotti, Enriquez, offensive linemen Lucas Govan and Kodiak Sauer, and defensive lineman Zack Schneider.

The 2018 Padres also reached the CCS finals with a 12-0 record, losing to The King's Academy, and Carmel reached the semifinal round in 2013, 2014, and 2015.

Carmel also had undefeated seasons in 1949 (9-0), 1957 (8-0), 1958 (7-0-1), and 1959 (7-0), but did not play postseason games in those years.

enforcement. In an emotional interview, Jane Doe disclosed that Mendoza forced her to orally copulate him more than a dozen times over the course of two years, starting when she was seven years old. She articulated multiple incidents that she remembered occurring at the Soledad homes her family shared with Mendoza from 2012 to 2015.

With the assistance of Jane Doe's family, Detective Gustavo Gomez of the Soledad Police Department created an internet account for Doe and contacted the defendant through a messaging service, pretending to be Doe. Over the course of multiple days, the defendant admitted to molesting Doe and even reminisced in detail as to the ways he sexually abused her and how much he missed doing it. At one point, the defendant said: "I wish I could have you as a small child again." By the end of the conversation, the defendant was attempting to meet "Jane Doe" at a hotel in Paso Robles to have another sexual encounter. Mendoza was arrested in the city of Coachella in January 2020.

At the sentencing, Doe and her mother both gave victim impact statements and talked about how horribly the abuse affected Doe. Due to recent amendments in California Law, Mendoza will be eligible for parole after serving only 20 years of his sentence.

A Cornerstone in Luxury Real Estate for Over 100 Years

My mother, the monsignor, and a traditional table of tasty tidbits

THE THIRD week in March had me itchy with anticipation when I was a kid. It meant two days off from school. It was double saints' days that week.

The whole world celebrated St. Patrick's Day on March 17, but in my Italian neighborhood, March 19 was far more important. It was the feast day of St. Joseph, the patron saint of our parish, St. Joseph's Cathedral, and of our grade school.

St. Joseph's Day was an automatic no-school day. We were given St. Paddy's Day off because our pastor, Monsignor Francis Aloysius Garvey, or as he pronounced it: G-a-a-r-vey, was born to the sod.

St. Patrick's Day may mean corn beef and cabbage dinners, but St. Joseph's Day is a meatless feast of pastries and breads spread over a large table, la tavola di San Giuseppe.

Legends from the Middle Ages attribute the end of a devastating drought to entreaties the Sicilian people made to St. Joseph. March 19 is also Father's Day in Italy. It is a shared celebration in which the riches of food are given as alms to the poor: traditional etiquette is that no one can be turned away from this table, which is filled with sesame-coated breads in symbolic shapes such as carpenter's tools, crosses, hearts, St. Joseph's staff, and the saint himself. Fish, especially anchovies and sardines, is served instead of meat. And the first greens of spring, dandelions and cardoons (burdocks), are spread on pizza.

It is way too long since I've enjoyed the delicious food of a St. Joseph's Table. I have one cousin in Buffalo who, along with her neighbors, still carries on this living tradition.

Now, back to Monsignor Garvey, who is the reason I received a very fine Catholic education. My two older brothers started school at Cathedral because we lived within the parish boundaries. We moved before I entered first grade, so my brothers transferred to a public school.

'Not another one'

Some of my earliest memories are of the long days waiting for my brothers to return from school. I don't remember how I passed the time because it was so long ago. I'm sure imagination was involved because there was no television and we had very few books and hardly any toys. We usually received a single toy at Christmas. Birthdays meant new socks and underwear.

One day while my brothers were in their third day at their new school, I was home alone with my mother. The doorbell rang and mother asked me to get it. I opened the door to 6 feet, 3 inches of Monsignor Francis Aloysius Garvey. I had no idea who he was, although I must have seen him from a distance at church services. He was resplendent in a long black cassock with scarlet buttons and a large scarlet sash around his waist. On his head was a black berretta with a scarlet tassel. He wore scarlet slippers. He bent down so we were at eye level and said, "And what would be your name, laddie boy?"

"Who's at the door?" my mother called from the kitchen.

"God," I replied.

That night at dinner, mother related what happened. Monsignor Garvey came to learn why my brothers weren't in school. He told her to forget about the parish boundaries because the school needed two boys from such a fine upstanding family. What it needed was families whose tithes and offerings could help support the school.

"He wants you there Monday morning," mother said.

My own matriculation to St. Joseph's Cathedral school took place the following year. We were the only family with three children in school at the same time. That and the fact my mother was involved in many parish activities made our name a prominent one at the school.

Thus began eight years of wearing my brothers' hand-me-downs while trying to live up to the expectations the nuns had for me. My brothers were excellent students, although slightly mischievous.

Each year, when I entered a new grade, the nun who was the teacher would eye me with an expression that said either, "Oh no, not another one," or, "Oh good, another one."

A gentle man

Even after my brothers graduated, I was under careful scrutiny as I entered each new grade. I had to maintain our family's good name and live up to, or surpass, my brothers' achievements. I also followed them into altar boys service. Perhaps my mother was proudest of her sons during Midnight Mass at the Cathedral, when there were three Gervase boys at the altar at the same time.

I got to know Msgr. Garvey during the many times I assisted him at Mass, and at weddings and funerals. He was a gentle man who always reminded me to give his regards to my mother.

The school and the church are both gone. Mother and Msgr. G-a-a-r-vey have gone on to their heavenly rewards. The tradition of St. Joseph's Table carries on.

Contact Jerry at jerrygervase@yahoo.com.

This impressive spread is typical for the feasting that occurs in Italian households on March 19, a holiday in honor of St. Joseph. The table is laden with sesame-coated breads in various shapes of religious significance and is intended to be shared with the poor.
